COMPOSER IS FOUND DEAD, GAS TURNED ON

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Vera Lehmann, a young dancer, known on the stage as Vera d'Artelle, was taken to Flower Hospital a week ago Friday suffering from veronal poisoning. She had been found unconscious on the floor in a rear room of her mother's costume shop at 249 West Forty-second street—the Heart of the Roaring Forties.

The doctors at Flower Hospital fought hard to save her, but Monday morning she died. She had never rallied from her coma.

It was 12 hours later when the superintendent of an apartment house at 257 West Ninety-first street, near Riverside, discovered gas pouring from the ground floor apartment.

He summoned a policeman. They forced the door. On the kitchen floor ,with every gas cock of the oven turned on, they came across the body of Louis Koemmenich, noted, in pre-war days, as musical composer and leader.

Note Found Beside Him.

On the floor beside him they found a note scrawled in lead pencil. It wasn't signed. It bore every evidence of having been hastily executed. The note read:

"Just received word that Vera committed suicide. This being a great loss to me, there is nothing else left for me to do."

That was the simple fashion in which Louis Koemmenich epitomized his life's tragedy. The story back of it is raw life.

Koemmenich was 55 years old. He had been married 36 years. He had a son and two daughters, one of whom is married.

In 1912 he reached the pinnacle of his career when he succeeded Frank Damrosch as conductor of the Oratorio Society. Prior to that he had charge of one of the largest German choral organizations in the city, and antedating that he had achieved musical fame as director of the Junge Maennerchor of Philadelphia that won the Kaiser Wilhelm prize three consecutive years under his leadership.

The war came along and Koemmenich had the courage of his convictions as to which side carried the blessings of the creator.

Broken in Fortune.

He believed in the cause of the Fatherland and was outspoken in his belief. The war ended, he found himself broken in fortune. He seemed incapable of setting to work to rehabilitate his fortunes.

It was a horrible blow to his pride to find himself starting out about a year ago as orchestra leader in a road company of "Aphrodite." He brooded.

He didn't seem to have the ability to take a strangle hold on fate and force it to bend to his ambition. His wife and family were much concerned about him.

Then came a change. It was sudden, like the sun peeping through the cloud back of an October afternoon. There was a young woman in the "Aphrodite" company, he wrote to his wife, her name was Vera Lehmann, who showed promise of golden attainment. He was interested in her.

"She has a sweet voice, she's pretty and I am going to give her vocal instruction," he wrote.

Old-time Buoyancy.

From then on his letters to his wife were marked by a nearer approach to the old-time buoyancy of his more successful days. In nearly all his letters on the road he spoke of Vera.

Mrs. Koemmenich told the whole story today in simple fashion. She was delighted that her husband had found something to chain his fancy. She believed, and probably with all truth at that time, that Koemmenich's interest was of the "mother" hen variety so often exhibited by elderly German music masters toward youngsters with promise of exceptional talent.

It may be mentioned here that Vera Lehman was the young woman who performed a sensational dance in the forepart of Morris Gest's

SELF-ACCUSED ABSCONDER PROVES NOT TO BE MAN SOUGHT

Edwin Morse, Charged with $78,166 Theft From Denver Firm Still at Liberty.

By the Associated Press.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Aug. 19.—Edwin Frederick Morse, accused of absconding with $78,166 from the International Trust Co. of Denver, has not yet been captured. With the arrival in San Antonio of A. W. Copeland, chief clerk of the Denver Bank, the man held here for the last week following his assertion that he was Morse, was positively identified as not being Morse. The identification settles a question which has disturbed Federal officers since the man in custody waded the Rio Grande at Laredo a week ago and subsequently said that he was Morse, "the man you want."

Copeland's first glance satisfied him that the man was not the missing bank employe, for he had worked side by side with Morse for two years and knew him intimately.

Definite determination that he is not Morse leaves the officers to face one of the strangest cases called to their attention. Who is the man in the question they have been unable to answer. Another question they all ask is "why did he say he was Morse." In an effort to answer these questions the man is being further detained.

LABOR LEADERS SENTENCED AS EXTORTION CONSPIRATORS

Strike Said to Have Been Bought Off by Funds Paid Four Chicago Men by Builders.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 19.—Thomas Walsh, Frank Hayes, aPtrick Kane and Roy Shields, labor union leaders, were all found guilty of conspiracy to extort tonight by a jury in the criminal court. The penalty for each was fixed at one year's imprisonment in the county jail.

Against each defendant witnesses testified that strikes had been "fixed," or bought off by contractors and builders of the city. All of the defendants denied ever calling a strike for such a purpose, and all denied ever taking any money but Kane, who asserted that one contractor had given him a "little present" of $500.

John E. Northrup, the prosecuting attorney, characterized the verdict as 'another step in the cleaning up process which is going to destroy union labor crookedness, save the unions from themselves and save the public from the grafting of crooked business agents."

SLAIN TAXI OPERATOR'S WIFE DENIES SHE KILLED HIM

Says She Wrote No Affectionate Letters to Any Man But Her Husband.

By the Associated Press.

TOMS RIVER, N. J., Aug. 19.—Mrs. William Giberson, who is in jail charged with the murder of her husband, a taxicab operator, today denied in the presence of newspaper men and her lawyer that she had killed him.

"I did not kill him," she said, as she sat in her cell. "I stand in the presence of my God innocent and unafraid. This is the secret of my calmness about which the officials have been worrying."

Mrs. Giberson also denied that she had ever written any affectionate letters to any man not her husband. She said the prosecutor was at liberty to publish any letters he may have found in the house. She declared that she knew nothing about quarrels her husband is said to have had with other men.

She said she knew nothing of a check for $1700 said to have been in her husband's possession when he was killed.

HARDING APPROVES BORAH PLAN FOR COAL COMMISSION

Senator Agrees to Changes in Measure for Body to Determine Advisability of Nationalization.

NEW METHOD OF SELECTION LIKELY

Post-Dispatch Bureau,
20 Wyatt Building.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—President Harding today notified Senator Borah that his bill providing for the establishment of a fact-finding coal commission would be approved by him if he would agree to certain modifications.

The purpose of the Borah proposition is to inquire into the coal industry and "report the facts." The measure, now in the hands of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, also recommends that the commission report on the advisability of the "nationalization" of the mines.

Senator Borah assured the President that the changes outlined would be acceptable to him.

The President's communication to Senator Borah was made after a conference with Republican Leader Mondell and presumably registers willingness of the Republican House leaders to accept the Borah formula for putting into effect the President's recommendation of yesterday for the establishment of such a commission. Mondell refused to say whether or not the Borah bill meets with general approval among Republican leaders and there were indications that some of the House leaders would prefer a substitute measure which would eliminate the recommendation to report on nationalization of the mines.

Opposition to Buying Body.

Mondell has summoned the Republican members of House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and Chairman Winslow will call a meeting of this committee within a few days. It is expected that the coal commission legislation and the President's recommendation for a coal purchasing organization will be considered by this committee in the House. While the establishment of a coal investigating commission will meet with no difficulty in Congress, President Harding's recommendation for the establishment of a coal agency which will purchase coal for interstate shipments, is likely to receive hostile consideration in both Senate and House.

Republican members are unwilling to be quoted on the question, but their reaction is distinctly critical. The objection to it is that its socialistic tendency will put the Government in business when it is endeavoring to get out of it as much as possible and might have an effect in inducing too favorable consideration of the possible nationalization of the coal mines.

Still another objection registered against it is that it might have a tendency to increase coal prices generally, rather than reduce them.

Senator Cummins, chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, will call a meeting of his committee to give the recommendation consideration.

Proposed Changes.

The changes which President Harding suggested be made in Senator Borah's bill dealt with the organization of the commission.

He proposed that the number be increased from 3 to 5, and that it be an open commission, instead of one selected from groups as proposed by the Borah bill.

Borah said there was no objection to increasing the number of the members of the commission and accepted the plan for an open commission. He explained he did so on the ground that the miners and operators were to conduct investigations of their own, so that the results of the Government investigation could be checked up with those of the interested parties.

As prepared by Senator Borah, his bill called for the appointment of three members to be accepted from a list of nominees, three to be made in each case by the president of the National Coal Association, three by the President of the United Mine Workers, one to be chosen by the President as representative of the public, not to be

"VISCOUNTESS" IS BARRED FROM ENTERING U. S.

Traveler Admits Divorce Suit Is Pending in Paris but Would Wait for Decree.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Traveling as "Viscountess Berenger P de Boelieres," but withholding all claim to such rank when she appeared before a board of special inquiry on Ellis Island, a woman of unusual charm was refused permission today to enter the United States.

When the right was denied her on the technical ground that she was likely to become a public charge, this young woman of culture did not say she was a "Viscountess," nor was she asked by any member of the board which excluded her. But the title is written to her name on her passport and on the baggage tags fastened to her various trunks and pieces of baggage. Apparently, her modesty and chagrin over being excluded was the explanation of her diffidence.

Whatever her social rank, Mrs. Berengere de Boelieres, as she allowed herself to be addressed by inspectors and interpreters alike, told an extraordinary story of domestic complications interwoven with romance.

Divorce Suit Pending.

She said she had inherited sufficient wealth from her mother to place her far beyond want, but admitted she was suing for divorce in France.

The woman's story became complicated from the standpoint of the immigration law when she admitted a romance exists between her and William Grant of Ardmore, Pa., whom she had met on the golf links at Monte Carlo. Nor did it help matters much when Grant appeared before the board of special inquiry and acknowledged his love for the Viscountess and said they intended to get married in America.

"But you are not yet divorced. How can you get married to this man in America when you are not freed from a former marriage in France?" the Viscountess was asked.

"Only Verbal Agreement."

"Oh, well, but the divorce will be granted in October, and we can wait for the marriage until then," she said. "Besides, we have only verbally reached a conclusion of marriage. Nothing is down on paper in black and white as to our intentions of getting married, and nothing need be until the divorce comes in October."

The "Viscountess" hastily took an appeal to the authorities in Washington, and sent telegrams to friends in Brookline, Mass. It was said she had acquaintance there with a family of the name of Reynolds.

William Grant is said to be well known among American golf players.

Traveling with the "Viscountess" are her maid and the latter's child. They are all detained on Ellis Island pending the appeal to Washington.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Aug. 19.—Collections of State income tax up to Aug. 1 this year are $1,949,940 behind similar collections at that time last year, according to the records of State Auditor Hackmann. The records show that on Aug. 1, 1921, a total of $4,462,857 had been collected on income tax, while up to that date this year, the aggregate was only $2,512,917.

Indications are that probably not more than $250,000 more will be collected on this tax during the year, which will leave the probable annual total of approximately $2,760,000 at least $2,000,000 behind the total for 1921, which was $4,794,494.

FIREMEN'S STRIKE HOLDS UP TRAINS FOR LOUISVILLE

Southern Railway Trains Both Ways Fail to Start Because of Trouble at Princeton, Ind.

SALE OF THROUGH TICKETS STOPPED

Precautions Taken at Shawnee, Ok., Against Bombing of Shops, on Reported Presence of I. W. W.'s.

Through passenger service between St. Louis and Louisville, over the Southern Railway, was interrupted last night, by the reported refusal of firemen and brakemen at Princeton, Ind., a division point, to take out trains in either direction.

Sale of tickets over the Southern was ordered stopped at Relay Depot, East St. Louis. Train number 1, due to leave St. Louis Union Station for Louisville at 9:20 p. m., was held indefinitely, and it was announced that number 2, the corresponding train in this direction, scheduled to leave Louisville at 9:50, was being held at Louisville.

The day train from Louisville, due here at 7:24 last evening, arrived without much delay.

The line between St. Louis and Louisville is a western offshoot of the Southern Railway system, and there are two through trains a day, besides local trains between St. Louis and Mt. Vernon, Ill., and between Louisville and Princeton, Ind. Princeton is 162 miles from St. Louis.

At the yardmaster's office at Denverside, East St. Louis, it was stated that the difficulty was on the second division of the road, between Mt. Vernon and Princeton. Movement of trains between St. Louis and Mt. Vernon, a distance of 88 miles, is still possible, it was said, but the officials of the road did not wish to sell through tickets under such conditions.

At Princeton, at 11 p. m., it was stated by a representative of the Southern that the general superintendent of the line was in conference with the men who had refused to work, and that there was a prospect that they would return.

By the Associated Press.

SHAWNEE, Ok., Aug. 19.—With State troops mobilized at Oklahoma City ready to be rushed here, Federal, county and State officers took every precaution tonight to prevent possible outbreaks in connection with the strikes of railroad shopmen.

Thirty deputies under the direction of United States Marshal Alva McDonald, patroled the streets around the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific shops. Federal officers let it be known that they feared attempts to bomb the railroad property. Several members of the I. W. W. are said to have come here recently to stir up trouble.

Warning was given to the citizens of Shawnee in a statement issued tonight by Mayor George B. Caruth that unless all persons co-operated with Federal and county officers in keeping the peace and stilling agitation, the city would be placed under military rule.

Mayor Caruth declared the strike situation as "assumed rather serious proportions in the last few days and it seems there are some misguided persons who persist in violating the law."

The Mayor referred to a prevailing impression "that the United States Marshal's office is the avowed enemy of the striker and the strike sympathizers in and around Shawnee," and pointed out that the Federal officers were simply acting in obedience to orders of the Federal court to protect the property of citizens and the railroads during the strike.

MAIL TRAINS LITTLE AFFECTED BY STRIKE

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Despite the railway strike, there has been little delay in the distribution of mails, postoffice officials reported today.

R. S. Brauer, superintendent for railway mail service for the sixth division, declared that a survey of conditions showed that mail from eastern, southern, southwestern and most middle western points was arriving in Chicago on schedule time, while that from the Pacific Coast,

Two Armed and Disguised Men Force John L. Randazzo's Car Into Ditch, Making Off With $5000 Stud and $100 Cash.

John L. Randazzo, 25 years old, of 3721 Gravois avenue, secretary of the Randazzo Macaroni Manufacturing Co., 1028 North Sixth street, was held up, beaten and robbed of a diamond stud which he valued at about $5000 and $100 in cash about 8:30 last night on King's highway boulevard, near Miami street, by two armed and disguised men who escaped in a Ford touring car that carried no license plate.

The men had forced Randazzo to drive his automobile into a ditch. When they fled, Randazzo, who has a private watchman's license permitting him to carry a revolver for protection when taking company deposits to the bank, obtained his gun from a pocket in the automobile and fired six shots at the robbers' car.

Describes the Robbery.

When Randazzo had extricated his own automobile from the ditch the robbers had disappeared. He immediately drove to the Magnolia District Police Station, where he gave a description of the robbers and their car and then himself started out with policemen to search.

Randazzo said he was driving north on King's highway boulevard in the sparsely settled district about five blocks south of Arsenal street when the car containing two men drove to the side of his car. One of the men, revolver in hand, with an oath ordered Randazzo to drive into the ditch and struck him on the head with the revolver butt.

Struck in Face.

When the machines had stopped the second man, also armed, jumped from his car saying "Get the stud." Almost immediately he struck Randazzo in the face with the remark, "Don't look at me so hard." After taking the stud, which contained a five-karat diamond surrounded by 22 emeralds, and the cash, one of the robbers again struck Randazzo and they left.

In place of a license plate on their car was a cardboard sign on which was written the words "License Applied For." Randazzo said one of the men wore what appeared to be a false beard and the other had a small black mask over his eyes. Randazzo believes the disguise was used to prevent him recognizing the robbers. He was unable to give police a clew as to their identity.

WOMAN K. K. K. WORKER MARRIES MOVIE MAN

Mrs. Tyler, Close Associate of Acting Imperial Wizard, Has $75,000 Home Ready.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 19.—Mrs. Elizabeth Tyler, for several years one of the leading lights of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, today became the bride of Stephen W. Grow, an Atlanta motion picture man. Married by the Rev. Caleb A. Ridley, the stormy Baptist preacher and imperial chaplain of the Klan, the pair left at once for an automobile honeymoon which they said would take them as far West as Hollywood, Cal.

The wedding was private, only intimates of the bride and groom being invited. The wives of F. L. Savage, Klan chief of staff, and H. W. Evans, imperial kligraph, were the attendants.

Edward Young Clark, acting imperial wizard and for years a close associate of Mrs. Tyler, did not attend the ceremony. He became indignant when reporters sought to discuss the marriage with him. At imperial headquarters it was asserted by attaches that Clark, during the last few days, had done everything possible to prevent the marriage. He was obviously annoyed today after the news was published.

"Yes, it was somewhat sudden," said Mrs. Tyler after the wedding, "but I know that I am going to be very happy, and my interest in the Klan will not subside in the least. After our trip I'm going to spend part of the time working for the Searchlight."

Grow has been connected with the motion picture business here for several years. In the future he will be connected with the Southern Publicity Association of which Clark and Mrs. Tyler are the owners.

Grow met Mrs. Tyler while the nation-wide fight on the Klan was being waged a year ago in many of the large newspapers of the country. In late months he has been a frequent visitor at her home, but the decision to get married was not reached until Aug. 1, it was learned from friends today. Grow said he had the warmest feeling for Clark and that he had convinced himself long ago that the charges made against his bride and Clark were unwarranted and untrue.

"I love her, and that's the only reason I married her," said Grow. "If I've made anybody mad, I can't help it."

On their return to Atlanta, Mrs. Grow and her new husband will reside at her beautiful Howell Mill road residence, erected at a cost of $75,000.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Amateur and other radio enthusiasts would be able to import radio vacuum tubes duty free under a provision voted into the tariff bill near the finish today by the Senate.

The amendment was offered by Senator Frelinghuysen, Republican, New Jersey, who urged it on behalf of the amateurs.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., Aug. 19.—It was fine while it lasted, but the dream is over now—Johnstown is dry.

For a few brief hours real beer flowed over the bars and Mayor Cauffiel was hailed with cheers and toasts as the apostle of ale, the big brother of beer.

But tonight Johnstown has only a pleasant memory of that. For Mayor Cauffiel has turned out to be just a common prohibitionist; no, that's not quite right, he's a most uncommon prohibitionist.

Joseph Cauffiel knows what he wants, he knows how to get it and he doesn't mind having his little joke for a chaser. So when he decided Johnstown was too wet, he went about the job of drying it without the aid of moral texts or the police.

He simply issued a proclamation that the city's water supply was impure and in the emergency real beer and ale were to be served at all saloons.

Enforcement Officer Stiffler did nothing about it, and the Mayor's whole campaign was aimed at his office. Moonshine had been the alcoholic rule in Johnstown, and Cauffiel thought the prohibition authorities had not been active enough in enforcing the law.

This morning the eager citizenry stormed the bars. "We want Cauffiel beer," they stormed, and for a time they got it—real beer. But by noon State Prohibition Director John T. Davis got to town. By 2 o'clock Agent Stiffler was out of a job and Agent Sprague was in his place. By evening beer was once more only a memory of happier days.

And then the Mayor let the town in on the joke. The water supply was perfect; he had got the desired action from the prohibition authorities; Johnstown was in a fair way to being deprived of moonshine and with a smile, a wink and a chuckle Joseph Cauffiel issued the edict that will keep Johnstown quiet until he goes on another crusade.

"I'm perfectly satisfied," said the Mayor.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERITY BARS MARRIED MEN AS INSTRUCTORS

Average Salaries Said to Be Too Low to Support Families in Expensive Evanstonion Atmosphere.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Northwestern University has put up a barrier which will prevent married men from joining the university's teaching staff as instructors, according to Prof. Roy C. Flickinger, dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

The average salaries are too low to support professors' families in expensive Evanstonion atmosphero, Dean Flickinger said.

Although Northwestern pays its faculty members salaries equal to those of instructors in other universities, the cost of living in Evanston is higher than in most university towns, according to the dean. Social demands are also great and add to the expense of an Evanston professor. The dean said professors were paid much more than instructors.

TARIFF BILL PASSED BY SENATE; VOTE IS 48 TO 25

Three Democrats, Broussard, Ransdell and Kendrick, Cast Votes With the Republicans on Fordney-McCumber Measure, Which Now Goes Into Conference.

ONLY REPUBLICAN OPPONENT BORAH

Experts Estimate That Bill Will Add Three Billion Dollars to Burdens Now Being Carried by Ultimate Consumer.

The Post-Dispatch Bureau,
20 Wyatt Building.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—The Fordney-McCumber tariff measure, characterized by Democratic leaders as "the most abominable legislative act of an American Congress," passed the Senate late this afternoon. The vote stood 48 to 25.

Senator Borah, Republican of Idaho, cast the only negative vote on the majority side. He announced that Senator Norris, Republican of Nebraska, if present, would vote against the bill. A similar statement was made concerning the attitude of Senator La Follette, Republican of Wisconsin.

Broussard, Louisiana; Kendrick, Wyoming, and Ransdell of Louisiana.

Experts virtually agreed tonight that the average duties of the Fordney-McCumber bill are considerably higher than those of the Payne-Aldrich act, which was speedily repudiated by the people. It also is declared that the average is higher than when the measure was reported from the Finance Committee. This is due to the heavy increase in the agricultural and chemical schedules.

Adds Three Billion Dollars.

The bill as passed will add something like $3,000,000,000 to the burdens now carried by the ultimate consumer, according to hasty computations made by Democratic leaders and experts.

It is figured that the higher duties on sugar will cost the American public annually $157,500,000.

Four items in the cotton schedule will add $108,074,470 to the cost of clothing. These cover only long staple cotton, cotton cloth, draperies and cotton hosiery.

It is figured that six paragraphs in the financial schedule will take $195,447,063 from the pockets of the consuming public. Included in these are raw wool, yarns, cloth, carpets, dress goods and flannels.

Borah's Stand Expected.

The defection of Borah did not come as a shock to his associates. From the outset he has consistently voted against the proposed increases and an impression prevailed that he could not accept the measure after following this course.

When Nelson, Republican, of Minnesota, appeared today for the first time since the recent death of his wife, a report was circulated that he had hastened here to vote against the tariff bill. The prophesy did not prove true.

Lenroot, Republican, of Wisconson, and Kellogg, Republican, of Minnesota, have voted against the items in bill with fair regularity. It was believed possible that one or both might jump over the party fence at the end. During the debate this afternoon, Lenroot and Kellogg declared they could not support the bill unless it carried the flexible provisions under which the President could raise and lower duties.

It had been understood from the beginning that Broussard, Kendrick and Ransdell would vote with the Republicans. Their interests in sugar, wool and other forms of protection caused them to take this attitude against their own associates.

Awkward Moment Averted.

It developed today that the excessive rates on sugar could have been modified but for absenteeism last night. Both Republican and Democratic Senators were absent when two votes would have reversed the result. It is believed Democratic leaders and politicians are just as

SAMPAIO CORREIA QUITS CHARLESTON TODAY FOR MIAMI

Makes the 125-Mile Flight From Southport U. C. in 2 Hours and 14 Minutes.

FLOPPY WEATHER MARKS THE TRIP

Craft Will Be Provisioned for Over Water Trip Providing Elements Are Favorable.

By GEORGE T. BYE,
(Copyright, 1922.)

CHARLESTON, Aug. 19.—Faint heart ne'er won fair weather, and Skipper Hinton of the Longitude Express decided to take the air—good or bad—at the shrimping village of Southport, N. C., at 4:07 this afternoon (New York time). We landed in the Cooper River, Charleston, at 6:21 (New York time), having made our run of 125 miles in two hours and 14 minutes.

By the courtesy of Lieutenant-Commander B. L. Brockaway, Captain of the port, we were guided to the battleship anchorage by Boatswain P. Lehrman in the harbor boat Kangaroo.

The seaplane already is being fueled for tomorrow morning, when we hope to set out at daybreak for Miami and a few hundred miles nearer Brazil. If the winds are favorable Skipper Hinton will fly directly over water to Nassau from Charleston, but more of yesterday's and today's weather will keep us hugging the coast line.

Yesterday Hinton tried every expedient to give stability to our big flying boat. Baggage was shifted back and forth. Wilshusen, Baltzeil and myself were called close to the pilot seats to center the weignt amidships. Still the pitching and tossing of Sampaio Correia kept up in the squally wind.

No doubt in a few days we shall be so "hard boiled" that the biggest wind clouds will only cause us to spit contemptuously overboard, or leer a buccaneer's leer.

Baltzell made his first excurson out of his cockpit to photograph Hinton at the wheel from behind, and he was fortunate in being at the crank of his Pathe camera when the first smash of the windstorm hit us. His pictures of Hinton using all his strength and skill trying to keep an even keel in the badly upset aerial sea should prove exciting, as they will show glimpses of our careening seaplane against a tipsy horizon.

YOUTH, FOUND WOUNDED IN ALLEY, SAYS NEGRO SHOT HIM

Gus Pisholte, 18, Tells Police He Was Held Up—Girl Also Is Found on Scene.

The police found Gus Pisholte, 18 years old, of 1437A North Sixteenth street, in an alley on Blair avenue, between Mullanphy street and Cass avenue, last night at 11:30 o'clock, suffering from a bullet wound in his left thigh.

Pisholte said that a negro had compelled him to go into the alley at the point of a revolver and, finding only 45 cents in a search, shot him and ran.

Eleanor Brantigan, 17 years old, of 1524 North Fifteenth street, with whom Pisholte admitted he had been keeping company, was in the alley when the police arrived. She declared that she was not with him at the time of the shooting, but had run into the alley when other girls told her a shot had been fired.

NEGRO SHOOTS HIS WIFE

Mrs. Julia Cherry, negro, 34 years old, residing at 1633A Linden street, was shot by her husband, Joe Cherry, 34, at 11:30 o'clock last night, following a quarrel in front of the Linden street address. Cherry fired two shots at his wife, one striking her in the right side, and then fled.

Witnesses said Cherry had been cursing his wife and ordering her to return to their room, and opened fire when she refused. She was taken to a hospital. The extent of her wound was not determined. Police were unable to find Cherry. He has but one arm.

Clarence Sommers, 28 years old, of 1224 Purcell avenue, a service car driver, last night reported to police that a man who engaged his machine near Page avenue and Hodiamont tracks forced him to get out of the machine at the point of a revolver at Page and Sutter avenue and drove away with the machine.

"Don't worry about this car, I just want to use it for a job or two right here in St. Louis and then you will get it back," Sommers told police the man remarked as he prepared to drive away.

Two Business Blocks Burned.

DOCTOR WHO "DIED" AFTER CONVICTION IS REPORTED ALIVE

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Reports that Dr. J. Newton Roe, wealthy hotel owner, who was reported to have died more than a year ago just before he was to have started for the Leavenworth penitentiary to serve a sentence of 18 months for violation of the prohibition laws, was alive and well in Argentine are being investigated by Federal agents, it was learned today.

Although the physicians who attended Roe during his illness about a year ago scoffed at the rumors, the grave near Valparaiso, Ind., where the doctor was supposed to have been buried was recently opened. The exhumation, it was said, failed to prove positively that it was his body that was buried. His estate also was reported missing.

Tax officials, prohibition agents and plaintiffs in a suit against the doctor and his estate are concerned in the verification of his death. The suit against him was brought by Mrs. Neva A. Brown, sole heir to the late President Henry B. Brown of Valparaiso University, who sought to force an accounting for the funds of the Chicago Dental College of Surgery, of which Dr. Roe was once the head.

Dr. Roe and two bartenders in a hotel he owned were sentenced to the penitentiary after being indicted for conspiracy to violate the prohibition laws.

interested in any way with the coal industry.

The President's objection to this method of appointing the commission is the result of the experience with the national Railway Labor Board. That board is made up of representatives of the public, the employes and the employers, with the result that employers and employes' representatives always have taken opposite sides and the representatives of the public were forced to vote with one or the other in order to reach a majority decision.

The Commissioners would draw salaries of $8000 each and the commission would cease to exist within one year after appointment.

Points to Be Investigated.

The commission is authorized to investigate thoroughly the coal industry and submit recommendations relative to:

1. Standardizing the mines upon the basis of their productive capacity and regarding the closing down of mines which, by reason of their natural limitation, fall below the standard.

2. Standardizing the cost of living of mine workers and the living conditions which must be supplied or afforded in order to surround the workmen with reasonable comforts, recognizing the psychological effect of such surroundings in respect to their efficiency.

3. Standardizing a basis of arriving at the overhead cost of producing the coal and delivering it at the door of the consumer, recognizing in this compilation that the standardized cost of living to the miners must be the first and irreducible item of expense.

4. The advisability or necessity of nationalizing the coal industry.

5. The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation and control of the coal industry.

The bill carries an appropriation of $100,000 to enable the commission to carry on its work. It is given authority to summon any person and to have access to any books, correspondence or documents relating to the subject under investigation. The files of the Federal Trade Commission are made accessible by making it mandatory for all officers of the Government to furnish any information demanded.

EIGHT CONTESTS OF NOMINATIONS PUT ON RECORD

TWO NOMINEES FILE COUNTER AFFIDAVITS

Reputed Irregularities in 315 of 618 Precincts Will Come Before Board Tomorrow.

Eight contests of nominations in the primary election Aug. 1, charging false returns, destruction of ballots, rejection of legal votes and "repeating," had been filed with the Board of Election Commissioners at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the limit for the filing of contests. Two nominees involved in the contests filed counter affidavits protesting against opening of the ballot boxes.

The charges in the eight contests, contending irregularities in 315 of the 618 St. Louis precincts, will be taken up by the Election Commissioners at 2 p. m. tomorrow, and a decision made on whether the ballot boxes in the 315 precincts will be reopened for a recount of the vote.

Several other complaints involving conduct of election officials and practices in the primary election have been lodged with the Election Commissioners, Chairman John B. Edwards said yesterday. No affidavits have been filed in these cases, but the board plans to investigate them and cases in which evidence can be obtained will be placed before the grand jury in September. Irregularities were apparent on the face of the returns in some precincts, he said, but the defeated candidates involved did not care to enter into contests.

Chief Sources of Complaint.

Dissatisfaction with the primary results comes chiefly from candidates for nominations for Constable or Justice of the Peace, seven such jobs being under contest. The eighth contest was filed by M. F. Doud, defeated for the Republican nomination for Representative in the Fifth District.

Charges that an election official in the Ninth Precinct of the Fifth Ward passed out sample ballots bearing the slate of the ward organization as he handed official ballots to voters was made by M. J. Gordon, defeated for the Republican nomination for Justice of the Peace, Fifth District. Gordon submitted affidavits from two voters who said they received the ward slate ballots when they entered the polls. Gordon said some of the slate ballots showed his name scratched and his name did not appear on others.

A complaint was made to the election officials in the polling place. The affidavit states an election official replied, "I know what I am doing and you don't need to tell me how." The police officer on duty was called in and stopped distribution of the slate ballots to voters within the polling place.

Another Allegation.

Gordon also alleged a precinct chairman in the Fourth precinct of the Fifth Ward who was electioneering at the polls, told him: "You will not get any votes in this precinct. I am giving them all to Murman. This precinct is going to deliver according to the slate."

A threat by Gordon to complain to the police, he said, brought the concession that he might get a few votes. This precinct gave Gordon 10 votes and Murman 67. Gordon charged the precinct chairman, who was not an election official, was present during the count of the votes.

The charge also is made that Gordon was badly worsted in the Twelfth precinct of the Fifth Ward. He was informed by one of the election officials about 9:30 the night of Aug. 1, two and one-half hours after the polls closed, that he "was running neck and neck with Murman." The count certified to the Election Commissioners was Murman 163, Gordon 22.

Three candidates sought the two nominations in this district. The vote was Murman, 1527; Claude W. Martin, 1459; Gordon, 1142.

John Eyerman, who was defeated by Edward J. Hoffmeister by 228 votes for the Republican nomination for Constable, First District, filed an affidavit charging fraud in 54 precincts in that district and asked a recount. He alleged irregularities in 21 precincts of the Tenth Ward, 22 in the Eleventh, 21 in the Twelfth, 10 in the Thirteenth and 1 in the Twenty-fourth.

Elastic Counting.

He charged the precinct election officials rejected 500 ballots that had been cast for him and through other irregularities failed to count approximately 90 votes legally cast for Eyerman. It also is alleged the officials counted 1000 more votes for Hoffmeister than actually cast for him. The official count gave Eyerman 6323 and Hoffmeister 6551.

Returns from the first precinct of the Twelfth gave Eyerman 8 votes and Hoffmeister 140. The affidavit states the vote was Eyerman 50, Hoffmeister 98. In the second precinct or the Twelfth the official return was Eyerman 6, Hoffmeister 140. Eyerman declares the actual count was Eyerman 60, Hoffmeister 84. Similar charges are made for several other precincts.

General charges of irregularities in the count and the handling of ballots are made by Frank Matousek, who lost the Republican nomination for Constable, Second District, to Harry M. Lohmann by 12 votes. Lohman received 2054 votes and Matousek 2042. Lohman filed a protest with the Election Commissioners stating no specific fraud was shown by Matousek, and asked that no recount be made. His protest pointed out a recount "would be a burden and expense on taxpayers of the city and might cost $2000 to $2500." It also might establish a bad precedent, the affidavit stated, as other similar affidavits, containing no specific statement of fraud, might be filed by candidates in the future seeking a recount.

Negro Makes Affidavit.

Charles H. Turpin, negro Constable in the Fourth District, who was defeated for renomination in the Republican primary, made affidavit that 100 ballots cast for him had been withdrawn from the ballot boxes and destroyed. Other ballots were placed in the boxes, he said, bearing votes for Langston Harrison and Robert E. Walker, who were the two nominees in this district. The vote was, Harrison, 1704; Walker, 1181; Turpin, 1142.

More than 250 votes were illegally cast, Turpin said, by persons who voted under names not appearing on the registration books. "Repeating" was carried on in each of the 28 precincts, the affidavit states.

Turpin adds that election officials failed to count 150 votes cast for him, and that approximately 200 ballots cast against him were placed in the boxes without being numbered or the names of the supposed voters being entered in the poll books.

Similar claims are entered in the contest filed by Harry W. McChesney, defeated candidate for the Republican nomination for Justice of the Peace, Fourth District. Two were nominated, Joseph Schuler getting 1826 votes, and Crittenden E. Clark, negro, 1574. McChesney got 1367 votes. In his affidavit McChesney asserts more than 100 ballots were taken from the boxes and others, cast for his opponents, substituted; that numerous votes were cast in the names of unregistered voters and that more than 100 absentee votes cast for him had not been counted by the Election Commissioners.

Five at a Time, Charge.

McChesney alleged that in some of the polling places voters folded five ballots together and dropped the five in the box as one ballot and that in these instances each of the five ballots were counted. He declared they were cast against him.

The claim was made that outsiders assisted the election officials in counting the ballots, contrary to law.

No specific instances of irregularities were given by Pearl A. Austin, in an affidavit filed over his loss of the Republican nomination for Constable, Fifth District. He declared fraud had been practiced in ten precincts in the count of the vote. Ira A. Dorsey, one of the two nominees, countered with an affidavit declaring that numerous votes cast for him had been rejected and that in some precincts voters were handed ballots on which his name already had been scratched. Gabriel Roth, with 1241, and Dorsey, with 1036, were the nominees. Austin received 1017 votes. Dorsey asked a recount in 16 precincts in the Fourth, Fifth and Nineteenth Wards.

Only one Democrat has filed a contest, Julius Seitz filing an affidavit Friday charging fraud in his defeat for the Democratic nomination for Constable, Fourth District. He asked a recount in eight precincts in the Seventeenth Ward, declaring votes for him had been rejected and others credited to his opponents. William J. Reilly with 869 and William E. Whalen with 1150, were the two nominees. Seitz received 778 votes.

M. F. Doud, defeated by more than 5300 votes for one of the four Republican nominations for Representative, Fifth District, asked a recount in each of the 136 precincts of the district. He made general charges of fraud in the count and asserted many votes cast for him had been returned for his opponents. He received 5313 votes and the low man of the four nominees received 10,683 votes.

well satisfied with the result. Their opinion is that the worse the bill becomes, the sooner it will be repudiated by the voters.

An awkward moment was averted by Sterling, Republican, of South Dakota, who withdrew his amendment to extend the three-mile limit to 18 miles for the benefit of prohibition enforcement authorities. This was done, Sterling said, at the suggestion of State Department officials who are negotiating with Great Britain for the suppression of rum smuggling.

In connection with the discussion of giving the President power to increase and lower customs duties, Gooding, Republican, of Idaho, sought to read some of his associates out of the Republican party. His efforts were not kindly received.

"This is a show-down," said Gooding, "so far as the great principle of protection is concerned. The people will know where we stand. The people then can send Senators here who represent their views.

Gooding scored Senators for declaring on the floor they would vote against the bill unless this or that rate was reduced.

Lecture Taken to Heart.

The lecture of Gooding was taken much to heart by Kellogg. "I have voted for many lower rates" he said "and intend to vote for some more. A man can be a good Republican and vote for lower rates. If the presidential power feature was eliminated, I could not vote for the bill. I will take chances with those who elected me."

"The average ad valorem rate" said McCumber "will be lower than in any Republican bill ever passed. There is not an item in this bill that any good Republican, who is at heart a protectionist, cannot defend before any man on earth."

"Under prevailing conditions" said Borah, "it is impossible to frame a tariff bill that would meet protective requirements. Conditions changed so rapidly that amendments were offered from day to day."

"I hope the betterment of the bill will continue on conference. I earnestly hope the committee will continue to improve it. My constituents will have an opportunity to judge of my Republicanism and I am responsible to them alone."

"I have no objection" said McCumber, to any Senator selecting any political party, new or old, as his standard. I do not object to those who, while claiming to be protectionists, are to my mind, far from being protectionists. Taht is a difference of opinion. They can have their views and I will have mine.

"Tired of Those Senators."

"But I do get a little bit tired of those Senators who appear before the committee and insist on and request rates which the committee consider are unconscionable and attempt to force them down the throats of the committee, coming up and complaining about rates being too high in other schedules, when the rates, measured by the ad valorem, in many instances are nowhere near as high as ones which they have advocated.

'Of course we have tariff-for-revenue-only Republicans on this side of the chamber and we have protectionist Democrats on the other side of the chamber. They are all entitled to their own views, and I do not think that any Senator has a right to criticise another for his particular views. Each Senator necessarily looks after what he regards as the interests of his own people.

"I want to say to those Senators who think there are high rates in this bill, that the average ad volorem rates in this bill will be lower than in any Republican tariff bill that has ever passed. They can if they see fit, abandon the protective ship, as a great many abandoned it and gave us the Wilson-Gorman tariff. But the country did not need more than four years to come back to its senses and it did come back with a vigor that might be a lesson to those who think that because some rates in this bill are not according to their views, they will abandon the Republican policy of protection."

Presidential Powers Approved.

The delegation of rate-making powers to the President was approved by a vote of 45 to 26. Borah cast a negative vote.

An effort was made by Lenroot to lower the duties on wool dresses. He proposed to lower them on an average of 5 to 10 per cent ad volorem. He failed by a vote of 34 to 35.

Three reserve votes on features in the silk schedule were withdrawn by Jones of New Mexico.

Speaking blandly and convincingly, Pepper of Pennsylvania, obtained the adoption of an amendment boosting the rate on silk waste from 35 to 45 per cent ad valorem.

The rate on silk outerwear was raised from 50 to 60 per cent ad valorem at the suggestion of Calder, Republican, New York. He said the finance committee orginally recommended 60 per cent.

Utilizing all his persuasive eloquence, Calder proposed an amendment making the duty on straw hats 60 per cent instead of 50. This was adopted.

Smith sought to lower the rates on laces from 90 per cent to 75 per cent ad valorem, but was unsuccessful. He said there is no justification for a 90 per cent rate.

Duty on Saddles Sought.

A last minute crusade was waged by McLean, Republican of Connecticut, to put a duty on saddles and harness. He said the making of saddles from pigskins made protection essential.

Jones of New Mexico promptly declared there is no such an animal as a pigskin saddle. "Cowboys do not have them," he said. "There is not one in New Mexico."

Protests were made by McCumber, Underwood and others against taxing leather products with hides on the free list.

"The Senator from Connecticut," said Heflin, Democrat of Alabama, would not know a pigskin saddle from a leather one."

The McLean proposition was rejected, 12 to 57. A substitute for the Tariff Committee features, offered by Jones of New Mexico was rejected, 34 to 37.

The rates on chinaware were lowered from 70 to 60 and from 60 to 55 per cent at the suggestion of Frelinghuysen. He said the action was taken on the advice of the Tariff Commission.

As the end drew near, large crowds filled the galleries. Senators became gay and sought to be funny: It became the fashion for the Democrats to join the dissenting Republicans in a shout of "noes," thereby rejecting every amendment proposed during the eleventh hour. Good humor prevailed and each laughed at the other as he was "razooed."

Much to the disgust of Trammell an amendment was slipped in reducing the rate on tomatoes from 1 cent a pound to half a cent a pound. This followed the elimination of the amendment put in by Ashurst, allowing the free admission of tomatoes during certain months.

Immediately upon the passage of the bill, McCumber moved to request a conference from the House. McCumber, Smoot and McLean, Republicans, with Simmons and Jones of New Mexico, Democrats, are designated as conferees.

HOPE FOR EARLY END OF ILLINOIS MINERS' STRIKE

Chicago Conference Seeks Settlement by Next Wednesday — Proposals Considered by Committee.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Hopes for a settlement of the coal strike in Illinois, possibly by next Wednesday, were expressed today following the appointment of and first session of a sub wage scale committee of six, composed of three executive officers of the miners and presidents of three Illinois coal operators' associations.

The committee was appointed after a joint session of the miners and operators during which both sides fully explained their positions, the miners holding out for settlement on the basis predicated at Cleveland and the operators reiterating their stand for arbitration. Diametrically opposed are the positions of the members of the sub wage scale committee, President Frank Farrington of the miners and his secretary and treasurer, Walter Nesbit and Harry Fishwick, declaring themselves unalterably opposed to arbitration while Rice Miller, H. C. Adams and W. K. Kavanaugh, presidents of three operators' organizations, are united for arbitration of disputes.

Soon after the wage scale committee went into executive session this afternoon, Rice Miller, its spokesman, announced that "an agreement might be reached by Monday." What that agreement would be he declined to say, but his statement was generally regarded by both operators and miners to mean that the Cleveland wage scale will be the basis. The session of the committee, with short adjournments, Miller said, will continue through tomorrow at least.

Upon the negotiations of an agreement or in case of a hopeless deadlock, the sub committee has been authorized to issue a call for a joint session of the miners and operators and then announce its findings for aproval of rejection.

It is generally understood that the joint session will be called next Wednesday.

Arbitration Is the Stumbling Block in Philadelphia Coal Conference.

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 19.—Two things today were disclosed by the conference between the leaders of the United Mine Workers of America and the operators to settle the coal strike in the anthracite fields, according to information obtained after the adjournment of the third meeting. The first is that the only stumbling block that lies in the way of agreement is the arbitration proposal offered by the operators. The second is that the operators are anxious to arrive at an agreement and resume the production of coal at once.

The latter development, coupled with the desire on the part of the mine workers to return to work, it was pointed out, augurs well for the success of the conferences. How much time will elapse before the representatives of the two sides get together proved speculative even among their own numbers.

The band will give two concerts at Sedalia today, one this afternoon and the other tonight.

The series of band concerts under the auspices of the Park Department closed last night. Two more concerts are on the Zoological Board schedule, one Aug. 27 and the closing concert Sept. 3.

FINAL EFFORT TO SOLVE INDEMNITY PROBLEM BEGINS

FRENCH URGING POINCARE'S PLAN

Temporary Compromise Between Now and November or December Sought by Commission.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The departure of the reparations mission for Berlin tonight marked the beginning of the final effort of the Reparations Commission to find a temporary solution of the German indemnity problem acceptable to both French and British public opinion and thereby prevent the threatened independent action by France, with a consequent breaking up of the Entente.

Sir John Bradbury, British member of the commission, and his associates left Paris at 7:40 o'clock and will arrive at Berlin tomorrow night. They have an appointment to see Chancellor Wirth Monday morning.

Poincare's Plan Championed.

Relative to the departure of this mission, French official circles have renewed with increased vigor the French plan for a comprehensive reparation settlement which Premier Poincare would have presented at London but for the refusal of Lloyd George to permit discussion of the allied debts.

The Reparations Commission is being unofficially urged to take up the plan, now that the Governments themselves have failed to solve the problem. The scheme provides for a reduction of the interest-bearing reparations to 50,000,000,000 gold marks, including both cash and merchandise, and the gradual cancellation of the remainder of the 132,000,000,000 marks indemnity.

This 82,000,000,000 gold marks would be canceled proportionately as the 50,000,000,000 are paid by Germany and as the interallied debts are canceled. The plan leaves the United States claims in abeyance for adjustment later, the point being made that the allied debts to the United States cannot at this time be considered with the general reparation question.

Temporary Compromise Sought.

The purpose, therefore, of the commission, is to find a temporary compromise which would bridge the interval between now and November and December, by which time it is expected the allies will be ready formally to consider cancellation of debts and reduction of indemnity. Whether such a settlement would be left to the Reparations Commission or considered by another conference remains undetermined, but the latter course probably would be taken.

Sir John Bradbury and his associates left Paris optimistic over the possibilities of arranging a temporary settlement.

The commission has been informed that Germany welcomes direct contact with the mission and it is thought not improbable that the German Government may offer new suggestions for meeting the situation.

German industrial interests have been exerting considerable pressure on the Government to prevent the intended independent action of France, which they say would take the form of immediate occupation of the Ruhr. Great Britain, it is indicated, would greatly prefer a settlement by unanimous appeal in the commission, rather than isolated action by the French.

Seeks Guarantees.

Sir John Bradbury will, therefore, make a strong effort to obtain additional guarantees meeting both the French and British positions, or some temporary solution, where a moratorium will not be necessary.

A loan of $12,000,000 would make possible the carrying out of the schedule of cash payments for the remainder of this year. The British members believe that such a loan may be raised if Germany can either together sufficient securities. The matter of a loan will be thoroughly inquired into by the mission because with it payments could be made until the projected November conference. If a loan is not feasible the mission is faced with the necessity of finding guarantees to take the place of the Poincare proposals to seize the state mines and forests in return for a moratorium.

Several plans have been discussed, but it is hoped that the Germans themselves will offer substitute guarantees which will meet the approval of both England and France.

NOT KNOWN TO ROBBERY VICTIM

Michael Blossomi, 24 years old, indicted and under arrest for alleged participation in the robbery, July 24, of the Morris Blumenfeld pawnshop, 800 Franklin avenue, could not be identified by Blumenfeld yesterday at the Carr Street Police Station, where Blossomi is being held. Identification had been made by a customer who was in the shop at the time it was entered by three men and robbed of diamonds and other jewelry valued by Blumenfeld at $15,000.

Blossomi was arrested after this customer met him on the street Friday.

VARIOUS AIR STUNTS PLANNED FOR "CIRCUS" AT SCOTT FIELD

Crowd Will Be Bombed With Talcum Powder; Dogs to Race in Parachutes.

The program for the "flying circus" at Scott Field, near Belleville, next Sunday, beginning at 9 a. m., and lasting until 6:30 p. m., includes exhibitions of every sort of flying the army knows about. The show is to be given to raise money for a recreation hall for enlisted men.

A "pony blimp" is to fly over St. Louis within the next few days, dropping literature about the "circus."

Arrangements are being made for parking automobiles and while no admission can be charged to enter Scott Field, a fee of 50 cents a person in parked vehicles will be charged.

Sixteen airplanes are expected from Chanute Field to do stunt flying. Feature attractions include "bombing" the crowd with talcum powder "bombs," and aerial bombing of targets with flour "bombs." Two officers are to make "hops" with jumping balloons, which carry a single person several hundred feet. Hundreds of carrier pigeons will carry messages on long and short flights.

"Bill," a mongrel dog from Chanute Field, is an entrant in the dog parachute race against "Bill," the English bulldog owned by Major John A. Paeglow, executive officer. The first of these two was dropped more than 23,000 feet from a plane, in a parachute, last summer.

Applications from several prospective brides and bridegrooms have been received, Major Paeglow said, for marriage in an airplane. Chaplain Frank P. Mackenzie will perform the ceremony, which may be broadcast by radio from the plane. The names of applicants may be placed in a box and the last drawn out will be those to go up.

An aerial "potato race" will be unusual, the planes, stopping for each potato and taking the air again.

Archie Steneck Held Under $10,000 Bond Following Death of William E. Geile.

Archie Steneck, driver of the automobile in which William E. Geile, 34 years old, of 3622 Blair avenue, was riding when fatally injured Aug. 12, was held under $10,000 bond yesterday when a verdict of homicide was returned by a Coroner's jury. The bond is the second largest ever required here in an automobile accident case.

Henry Hummel, driver of the other car in the collision, testified that Steneck's automobile was going at a high rate of speed when it struck the rear of his machine as he started across Washington boulevard after observing the "boulevard stop" at Jefferson avenue. Other witnesses said that the Steneck car was traveling 40 miles an hour at the time of the crash and that it turned over twice. Geile, who suffered a skull fracture, died Thursday.

Steneck, on the advice of counsel, refused to make a statement. He would give no definite address.

PARENTS OF 3 CHILDREN KILLED IN SULPHUR SPRINGS WRECK SUE

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas DeGonia Ask for $10,000 for Death of Each Child.

More suits were filed in the Circuit Court yesterday against the Missouri Pacific arising from the wreck at Sulphur Springs, Mo., Aug. 5. Thomas DeGonia and his wife, Mattie, of 8412 Reilly avenue, sue for the death of their children, Ralph, 6 years old; Melvin, 5 years, and Robert, 3 months, asking $10,000 in each case.

Another suit is by Edward Adolph, 25 years old, 2833 Clara avenue, who alleges that he was injured. He asks for $8000. Eugene J. McMahon, attorney in the DeGonia cases, said that his law firm, McMahon & Berthold, will also file damage suits for Mr. and Mrs. DeGonia and their daughter Mildred on account of personal injuries received by them in the wreck. He added that his firm represents clients wth claims aggregating $500,000 resulting from the Sulphur Springs disaster.

NOTE DROPPED FROM AUTO TELLS OF KIDNAPING OF GIRL

Marshal of Highland, Ill., Reports Miss of About 15 Dropped Letter.

The Marshal at Highland, Ill., telephoned the police of East St. Louis yesterday at 5 p. m. that 15 minutes earlier, as a green automobile was being driven through the streets of Highland, a girl in the car dropped a note into the road.

It declared that she was being kidnaped from Vandalia, Ill., and was signed "Martha Bruce." The East St. Louis police did not intercept the car. They were told the girl apparently was about 15 years old.

The Chief of Police of Vandalia said in response to an inquiry by telephone that he knew of no resident of Vandalia whose name was Martha Bruce, and no disappearance of a girl had been reported to him.

EQUAL BASIS IN COAL PRIORITY ASKED FOR

St. Louis Dealers Appeal to McIndoe for Ruling on Manufacturers.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Aug. 19.—St. Louis coal dealers yesterday asked the St. Louis coal conservation committee to have State Fuel Commissioner McIndoe place all manufacturers of nonessentials, who buy electric current from power plants, upon the same basis of priority as similar manufacturers who make their own power and who consequently have to buy coal, in which they are restricted at this time by orders of the Federal and State fuel commissioners. This inforamtion was conveyed to McIndoe today, it is understood.

No action along this line has been taken by McIndoe, though for some time he has been considering the necessity of meeting some such problem. It has been suggested that the only impratial and equitable methods of adjusting such situations would be to compel power plants to shut off current to manufacturers of nonessentials whose competitors are prevened from obtaining fuel because of being excluded from priority because of classification. Action will be taken as individual cases are brought up.

The fuel situation for the Eastern part of Missouri continues serious, McIndoe announced today, with the likelihood that it will become critical to the point of cessation of many industries unless more coal from Eastern fields starts moving toward Missouri within a week.

Priority orders for about 2500 tons of coal for Eastern Missouri has been placed by the Missouri Fuel Commission, none of this being for St. Louis. The bank guarantees on orders for 9000 tons for St. Louis applicants had not been received today at the commission headquarters, thought it was understood that they had been arranged for in St. Louis and would be along presently.

Fuel Committee May Ask for Action in Coal Situation Here.

The amount of coal to reach the St. Louis district by tomorrow will determine whether or not the Chamber of Commerce will be asked by the St. Louis Fuel Distribution Committee to take immediate action upon one of three methods suggested last week by the committee to avert closing down by many industries here because of the coal shortage.

The methods are: Pooling of all coal received here, for distribution to essential industries; purchase of a blanket order of coal at mine mouth by St. Louis business men, for distribution by an unofficial committee, and seizure of all coal coming into the city by the Mayor and its distribution by someone authorized by him for the work.

"Aphrodite." The dance, mentioned in some quarters as an "Artistic Triumph," was assailed by various censorship organizations and, after Dorothy Dalton's "Aphrodite," was the most talked of part of the production.

Took Part of Slave Girl.

On tour Miss Lehman took the part of a slave girl, an important part in the play. She was attractive physically. Many critics called her beautiful. She had the ambition to become a great dramatic actress, and for the last year had devoted every spare moment to the cultivation of her voice and the study of foreign languages.

When the Aphrodite tour ended last January Miss Lehman was a frequent caller at the Koemmenich home.

"People began to talk," said Mrs. Koemmenich today. "I began to realize that the harmless relationship of pupil and music master had given way to infatuation. I forbade Miss Lehman to call on Mr. Koemmenich when I was not at home."

There is no doubt, as Mrs. Koemmenich says, that as time went on the infatuation became more pronounced. Whether the girl saw this and tried to stem the tide is not known. She did, however, promise to see less of Koemmenich. That was last March, and one afternoon Koemmenich's daughters returned home to find their father had attempted suicide by swallowing veronal.

"We sent for Vera Lehman at that time," said Mrs. Koemmenich. "She sat by my husband's side for three hours and held his hand. I remained all the time in the room.

Girl Sent Him Flowers.

"During his illness she sent him flowers. They saw much of each other after that. I saw it was useless to try to end the affar. My husband and I had been married 36 years and I hoped his reason would return to him."

A week ago Wednesday, Koemmenich attempted suicide a second time by taking veronal. That time Miss Irman Koemmenich, one of the daughters, sent for Vera Lehman.

Miss Koemmenich told a reporter that she had not upbraided the girl.

"I pointed out to her," she said, "the disparity in their ages and I advised her to let my father alone."

Vera Lehman, it appears, had promised the Koemmenichs that she would obtain employment elsewhere. When asked why she had broken her promise she said:

"When I threatened to leave he threatened to commit suicide."

"They were both foolish," is Mrs. Koemmenich's verdict. "I don't blame the girl any more than I do my husband. He was 55 and she was 22. Who knows? Who can judge? I held my husband on a pedestal. By not judging, maybe I can keep him there. Isn't that the better way?"

BONUS BILL UP IN SENATE WEDNESDAY

Soldier Compensation Measure Next on Program After Tariff Legislation.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19. — The soldiers' bonus bill, as a consequence of passage of the tariff bill today, became the pending legislation before the Senate.

The bonus measure was laid before the Senate automatically, but debate was deferred until next Wednesday, the Senate taking an adjournment to give members a brief rest after the long tariff fight.

A number of Senators objected strenuously to even the brief recess ordered until Wednesday. Senator Robinson, Democrat, of Arkansas, led a fight for immediate consideration of the bonus measure beginning next Monday, but his motion to adjourn until Monday was defeated, 44 to 18, and the Senate adopted a motion by Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, Republican leader, to adjourn until Wednesday.

On both motions all party lines were broken and the roll calls gave no test of strength between advocates and opponents of the bonus measure, a large number of the former being found among the supporters of the Lodge motion, which was adopted, 46 to 16.

It was said that an effort will be made when the Senate reconvenes Wednesday to adjourn again until the following Monday, but there was doubt whether such a motion would prevail over the wishes of those demanding immediate consideration of the bonus bill.

Canada and the North was reaching Chicago 40 to 55 minutes late.

"There are 153 mail trains carrying mail into Chicago and 154 carrying mail out of Chicago each day, but as a rule there has been little delay because of disturbed schedule rule," he said.

Of the twelve most important mail trains into Chicago today, it was reported that five arrived on schedule time, while the others were delayed from 20 minutes to six hours, the one extreme delay being that of a mail train from Central Iowa which was due at 8:30 this morning.

The New York Central train carrying mail from New York and New England was on time, as were the Pennsylvania fast trains from Washington, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh; The Illinois Central from New Orleans, Memphis and the South; the Santa Fe from Kansas City and the Southwest; and The Illinois Central from Sioux City, South Dakota and the West.

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy train from San Francisco and the Pacific coast, due at 7:05 this morning, was only 55 minutes late, the Chicago and Alton fast mail train from St. Louis and the Southwest was 20 minutes late, while the Chicago and Eastern Illinois mail from Jacksonville, Fla., Atlanta and Nashville, was 40 minutes late. The Michigan Central train carrying mail from Detroit, Canada and points east arrived 50 minutes behind schedule time. The Big Four train from Cincinnati and the Southeast was 1 hour and 13 minutes late.

One of the men shot sustained a wound in the arm and is in a local hospital. The other man had not been found late tonight.

Smith said his home was in St. Louis, but that he came here recently to work.

By the Associated Press.

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 19.—Five hundred national guardsmen, said to be the largest body of troops ever called out in a peace-time emergency in North Carolina, were ordered by Gov. Morrison today to Spencer, East Spencer and Salisbury, where, according to representations of Southern Railway officials and the Sheriff of Rowan County, the situation brought about by the attempt of the railroad to man its shops with nonunion workers is menacing.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 19.—Troops were sent to Spencer as a result of the refusal of striking shopmen and sympathizers to allow 23 skilled mechanics to leave the train last night, according to a message received by the Citizen from an officer at Salisbury. The message stated that the men were continued on to Salisbury where they were taken in charge by approximately 150 strikers and sympathizers armed with clubs and were forced to return north.

GOMPERS CHARGES HARDING'S MESSAGE UPSET SMOOTHNESS OF SHOPMEN'S NEGOTIATIONS

20 Wyatt Building.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Organized labor's reaction to the message President Harding delivered to Congress yesterday was outlined today by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor who either criticized or condemned the recommendations for new legislation and suggested that the President's words had changed the attitude of the railway executives in New York, where negotiations previously had been progressing smoothly.

"Yesterday morning the representatives of the workers were in conference with the railroad executives," Gompers said. "Progress was being made for a settlement of the railroad shopmen's strike. They took a recess to meet in the afternoon and I am informed that the executives manifested a different mood and assumed a different attitude after they had learned the nature of the President message.

"I repeat that I think it quite unfortunate for the President to have delivered his address to Congress yesterday, because of the situation in which it seemed that matters were being worked out to the mutual satisfaction of both parties of the controversy. It seems to me misapplied psychology. The President said he did not think Congress could do anything to alleviate the present situation. The address might well have been deferred to a time of cooler judgment when these controversies were adjusted one way or another."

Regarding Coal Situation.

Taking up the President's recommendations, Gompers indicated that the position of labor on the coal commission legislation would depend on the provisions of the bill. He said he would prefer a coal commission such as was agreed to at Cleveland, with the help of the Government agencies. He declares it would not do to set up a commission composed of men unfamiliar with the industry.

In principle the agency for selling coal may be all right, Gompers thinks. He pointed out that one group of mines may be worked with great profit at a price regarded as normal when another group of mines, producing the same character of coal, would be so unprofitable, at what was regarded a fair price, that they could not compete. He added that this fact had to be taken into consideration during the war.

"It's a big problem," he said. "I think the President has in mind a suggestion that is worthy, but its practical application is doubtful."

Gompers said the authors of the bill to extend the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to cases where aliens were killed had in the back of their heads the protection of alien strikebreakers. He stated emphatically that he would not favor it.

Discussing the Herrin massacre, which the President had in mind in suggestion the legislation. Gompers said:

"No one can regard the Herrin trouble without a feeling of indignation, and yet it has been ascertained that the company men first shot innocent men. At any rate it was a nasty piece of business which no one could justify, but is the President's purpose to protect an alien or is it another effort to find a way to override the Constitution and law of the United States?"

Mentioning that President Harding said the Railroad Labor Board decisions must be made enforceable, he declared there was no other construction but that if the Labor Board imposes conditions repugnant to the men they either have to go to work or to jail.

"I am not willing to believe the President has in mind the full consequences of such a recommendation," Gompers asserted. "If there is to be compulsory labor we may well raise the question whether compulsory labor may not be forced on everyone, and not wage earners alone."

Discussing antistrike legislation, he continued: "I have an abiding faith that at last the common sense of the people of the United States will prevail, that they will not give up those principles of freedom because some men of high finance or subservient politicians are willing to go that way.

A Mischievous Untruth.

"I have faith that the Congress of the United States will never enact a law of that character. What constitutes slavery? The slave must work when ordered by his owner or master or those who have charge over him. The only thing distinguishing him from a free man is that the free man has a right to stop work."

Gompers was asked about the stopping of trains by the crews.

"I think the President was wrong when he says it was a conspiracy," the labor leader asserted. "My information is that the locomotives and the whole trains were in such miserable condition the lives of those on board were imperilled."

The statement that the rail and coal strikes were part of a deliberate plot against big industries and the Government were characterized as baseless.

"It is a mischievous untruth," he declared. "I know the men at the head of both organizations, the United Mine Workers and the Railroad Employes' Department of the American Federation of Labor, and the several unions whose membership is involved. I repeat that so far as these men are concerned it is a criminal libel to make that statement."

Referring to the present Congress Gompers said he thought there is little hope for any constructive legislation.

TROUBLES OF WAIF GO TO JUVENILE COURT AFTER ACCIDENT

Five-Year-Old Wandering the Streets Is Hit by Street Car on Olive Street.

The troubles of Margaretta Grisom, 5-year-old waif, who was injured Friday when she was struck by the fender of an Olive-University car in front of 3516 Olive street, were placed before the Juvenile Court yesterday by police who had been unable to locate her mother and learned that a woman who had been caring for the child was ill in a hospital.

She was standing in the car tracks when struck by the car. The motorman dropped his fender, which saved the child from injury other than cuts and bruises.

Police learned that her mother, whose address could not be obtained, had given the girl in infancy to Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Pennington, residing in a rooming house at 3507 Lindell boulevard, as the mother was unable to care for her. Police visited the rooming house and were informed Mrs. Pennington had been in a hospital for three weeks. Pennington is away from the house during the day and the child was said to have been wandering through the neighborhood at will, returning to the rooming house at times for food.

BISHOP HEARS OF ROW AT SCRUGGS MEMORIAL

Pastor's Request That Sunday School Superintendent Resign Reveals Methodist Clash.

Trouble in the Scruggs Memorial M. E. Church (South), at Cook and Spring avenues, said by some to have had its origin in revival services held last April, culminated last Wednesday in the request by the Rev. Morse H. Markley, pastor, that the superintendent of the Sunday School, B. P. McNail, resign.

A. G. Mason, 1335 Laurel avenue, was appointed by the Rev. Markley, but he says he will not serve.

Last April, the Rev. Markley was in the East on church business. While at Washington, he became interested in the teachings of the Rev. Charles Schrieve, and upon his return suggested the Rev. Schrieve be invited to the Scruggs Memorial Church to hold revival services. The services were held for two weeks at the church, and, it is said, the preacher became Pentecostal in his sermons, even, it is said, to the point of the exageration known as the "Holy Roller" type of emotional religious experience.

Following the departure of the Rev. Schrieve, it is said the Rev. Markley continued the meetings for a time, and up until the present has held special meetings on Tuesday afternoons for prayer for healing the sick, and on Friday evenings for religious services.

The Friday evening services are called "Pentecostal meetings," and are said to have been attended by emotional extravagance. Several of the church members have objected to this service, and to recent sermons of the pastor which, they say, refer continually to 'speaking with tongues.' claimed to be messages from the Holy Spirit which are babbled and later interpreted. Another feature objected to is the continued reference to the necessity of a "baptism of the Holy Ghost,' which, it is said, is not Methodist teaching.

The Rev. Markley's sermons have been criticised, and several members have left the church. However, the Board of Stewards is said to be composed of a majority who object to the new order, and when McNail's resignation was requested, he refused to comply, and is to make an effort to restore the old order, doing away with the Pentecostal services.

Markley has been pastor at the Scruggs Memorial Church since the fall of 1919. McNail has been superintendent of the Sunday school since the death of Henry Robins, Jan. 5, last, and has been an active worker in the church for more than ten years.

A telegram concerning the situation has been sent to Bishop W. F. McMurry, presiding officer of the St. Louis District. He is expected to return from Trinidad, Colo., the latter part of this week, when the matter will be discussed and settled. The district conference is to be held at Bonne Terre, Mo., late in September.

Both the pastor and McNail refused yesterday to make statements.

BAN ON KLANSMEN IN ARMY, NAVY AND LEGION SOUGHT

Resolutions Denouncing Ku Klux and Asking for Inquiry Into "40 and 8" to Be Offered at Hannibal.

STATE CONVENTION TO LAST TWO DAYS

Society Affiliated With Legion Said to Be Reluctant to Receive Catholic Legionnaires as Members.

Resolutions denouncing the Ku Klux Klan as an organization with principles inimical to Americanism and demanding that klansmen be expelled from the American Legion, will be introduced at the State convention of the legion, which convenes at Hannibal tomorrow for a two days' session.

Two other resolutions bearing on the same general subject will be offered, one calling on the Governor, Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy, to expel all klansmen from the national guard, army, navy, and marine corps. An investigation of the Society of the 40 and 8 in Missouri, an organization affiliated with the Legion and called the playground of the legion will be requested.

The Society of the 40 and 8 will be attacked, it is said, because of alleged discrimination in nominating legion men for membership, the gossip being that the organization is reluctant to invite legion men of the Catholic faith to its membership.

It appears from statements of several St. Louis legion men who wish their identity withheld, but who say they will state their views on the convention floor at Hannibal, that several men prominent in legion affairs in the cities of Missouri are members of the Ku Klux Klan, and cannot, it is declared, be 100 per cent American, as the American Legion understands Americanism, and be loyal to their oaths as members of the Ku Klux Klan.

Masking Criticised.

Sponsors of the resolution say that red-blooded Americans do not go about hooded and masked under cover of darkness to terrorize; to usurp the prerogative of the law, or aim to deprive the negro of his political rights, and that men who do these things have no right to be in the American Legion.

The first resolution commends the commander of the Fred W. Stockham Post, No. 245, of St. Louis, for compelling the resignation from the post of a known member of the Ku Klux Klan, and urges that similar action be taken by other commanders throughout the State.

The second resolution requests that the Governor cancel the commission of any member of the national guard known to be a members of the klan, it being sctated that the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy remove army, navy and marine corps officers who are members of the klan, it being stated that officers who are klansmen cannot consistently protect the lives and property of citizens whose race or religious belief may be under the ban of the klan. This is taken to mean Jews, negroes and Catholics, sponsors of the resolution say.

COX SEES FRANCE AND GERMANY NEARER THAN THEY'LL ADMIT

BERLIN, Aug. 19.—James M. Cox, Harding's Democratic opponent for the presidency of the United States, has arrived here by motor from Prague, thus ending the last lap of his journey through Western and Central Europe during which he passed a week at the meeting of the Council of the League of Nations in Geneva. Ex-Gov. Cox of Ohio has come to Germany at a critical moment when the mark is dropping 100 points daily—it fell today from 1100 to 1200 to the dollar.

During his three days stay here Cox will come in contact with every person of importance in governmental and industrial affairs, including President Ebert, Chancellor Wirth and Herr Hugo Stinnes. They, following the example of the leaders everywhere in Europe, will put themselves out to give their distinguished visitor all the information he seeks, for they wish to inform the American Democrats of the actual situation, both national and international.

Cox takes a calm view of the European affairs, for both the French and German sides of the many questions have been explained to him by the national leaders and their advisers. He sees France and Germany nearer together than either is willing to admit, especially on what the one expects to get and the other expects to pay on account of reparations.

Democratic Organization Meetings.

'Aerial Ant' Entered in the Pulitzer Air Races

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—A baby plane will be entered for the Pulitzer air races this fall. Perhaps playing on the names of two aviation officers of the army air service, who are interested in developing a small airplane, in Washington, they are calling the new baby flyer, "The Aerial Ant." Capt. Aubrey S. Eagle and Lieut. M. B. Asp have developed a machine which is more of a vest pocket edition than the Sperry Messenger plane. An officer who saw it working at Ellington Field recently describes the situation as follows:

"Early Saturday morning a sound of a running motor was heard. It was a purr quite unlike that of motors familiar to the trained ear of the group of pilots. There was a rush to the line; and, behold, there was Lieut. Asp with his home-made scoutplane, equipped with a new 60-horsepower Lawrence motor, ready for flight. It looked like a box kite and compared in size with the Messenger scout as a humming bird compared with a robin. Lieut. Asp screwed his courage to the sticking place and gave 'er the gun. Off he went, but the little ship was not exactly balanced. It wanted to go either up or down. So the pilto attempted the landing from about 75 feet. Alas, the ground was too close and the little asp lay prostrate. It was dragged to a hangar for repairs and a few modifications."

It Has Made Good.

But the little plane made good. Capt. Eagle states that he and Lieut. Asp designed this plane in 1920 and that it is built on lines quite different from those of any other plane now in existence. The span of the upper wing is 18 feet and that of the lower one 14 feet. The chord is 3½ feet and the gap 5¼ feet. As thus constructed the efficiency of the plane is practically that of two monoplanes. The main support of the wings is two solid struts running diagonally across each other from the top wing to the lower one, both passing straight through the fuselage and giving them the appearance of a huge X. The plane is then trussed up at each end of the wings by two K struts, with a small truss running to the axle.

Being trussed in this manner gives the little plane great strength, and this was recently demonstrated when it was pancaked from an altitude of 75 feet. The resulting shock was absorbed in all parts of the wings and nothing but the landing gear was damaged. The stagger of the wings can be changed 4½ inches by loosening four U bolts at the bottom of the fuselage. Both the upper and lower wings are in one piece, and the combined landing gear and struts from the fuselage to the upper wing are in one piece.

Reason for First Failure.

The wings have a flexible trailing edge made to accommodate the varying air currents and to cause them to pass away in slipstream. Capt. Eagle explained that the failure of the machine on the first trial was due to the fact that it was tail-heavy.

SUIT TO CONSTRUE BARNARD WILL FILED

Trustees in Doubt as to What Course to Pursue in Honoring Certain Bequests.

Trustees of the estate of George D. Barnard, wealthy president of a stationery company, who died seven years ago, yesterday filed suit asking the Circuit Court to construe his will. They say they are in doubt as to what course to pursue in honoring certain bequests, and they also are undetermined what portion, if any, certain beneficiaries should receive in the face of a deficit in the income. Specific bequests amounting to a total of $22,650 a year are provided for by the will, although the net income during the fiscal year ending May 30 last amounted to only $9,729.13, the petition sets forth.

The plaintiffs assert that the aggregate value of the estate was $2,000,000, which Barnard left in trust. He gave to his wife, Mrs. Mary L. Barnard, the family residence at 35 Portland place, which later was purchased by the late John T. Milliken; a summer home at Lake Geneva, Wis., valued at $100,000, and a monthly income of $2000 from a trust fund. From the remainder of the estate, the trustees were directed to distribute the income among several individuals, a mission, church and hospital, the will providing that the latter, the Barnard Free Skin and Cancer Hospital, 3421 Washington avenue, receive all remaining income after payment of specific bequests.

Mrs. Barnard renounced the will and elected to take one-half of the estate as her dower under the law. This left the remaining half, estimated at $1,000,000, with the trustees for the purpose of paying the other bequests. Mrs. Barnard, having received her share, is not concerned in the present suit.

One of the bequests was $2000 a year to St. Stephen's Episcopal Mission, Seventh and Rutger streets. That mission recently was reorganized as St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, and the change from a mission to a church may have the legal effect of canceling the bequest, the suit alleges. Another provision about which the trustees are not clear is whether certain bequests are payable once a year, monthly or otherwise. It is important to know who are in the annual class and who are not because of a clause which states that "in the event of a deficiency, the income shall first be distributed pro rata among beneficiaries to whom annual payments are made."

The trustees are Neil A. McMillan, Walker Hill, Frank O. Watts, Wallace D. Simmons, W. K. Richards, E. T. Ustick and Bishop Daniel S. Tuttle of the Episcopal Church. They are represented by Attorney Frank B. Coleman. In the present condition of the estate no payment, it was said, can be made to the skin and cancer hospital, supposed to be the chief beneficiary, because the will provides that it is to receive the income after all specific bequests have been paid. There is not enough money on hand to take care of such bequests.

Hebrew Leader a Visitor.

Members of the Young Men's Hebrew Association will meet the new executive director, Gilbert Harris, whose appointment has just been announced by the officers, at a steamboat excursion Tuesday night. Harris left St. Louis seven years ago, and since that time has been active in the affairs of the association. During the war he was a field worker for the Jewish Welfare Board.

HOUSING ASSOCIATION OUT OF CONTROVERSY

Issues Statement That It Will Take No Part in Disagreement With State Officials.

A statement that it would not enter the controversy between state officials and the Modern Home and Savings Organization of Kansas City, whose plan of loans to home-builders was held to be a lottery by the Attorney-General, was issued yesterday by the executive board of the National Association of Home Loan Institutions. William Sacks of St. Louis is president of the board, which has a membership representing institutions in five states. The Association previously had notified the Commissioner of Finance that it would eliminate any objectionable feature in a standardized contract used by the various housing trusts which constitute its membership.

The statement declares that basically these housing trusts are nearest in plan to insurance companies than any other financial institution. "For a monthly payment," the statement declares, "corresponding to premiums of insurance companies, these housing trusts undertake during a period not exceeding 120 months to loan at 3 and 4 per cent a certain sum of money. This corresponds to the definite sums paid by insurance companies to their policy beneficiaries upon death of the insured.

"The term of 120 months may be lessened by various contingencies. An increased sale of contracts and the consequent increased interest earnings which are applied against the time of maturity naturally lessens the time of maturity. If this involves lottery, then banks, insurance companies and building and loan companies are conducting lotteries, as they are similarly dependent upon deposits, interest on loans, premiums and payment of dues.

The association adds that it is not criticising State officials but seeks to co-operate in protecting the public. It resents, it says the inclusion of all housing trusts in the criticism of one.

Commissioner of Finance Hughes said in Jefferson City last night that at Sack's request he had arranged for a conference which he and Attorney-General Barrett would attend to be held in Jefferson City tomorrow at 2 p. m.

MISS TUMULTY IN AUTO CRASH

She Is Recovering From Hurts in Hospital in Germany.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Dispatches received here today through the State Department said that Miss Mary Tumulty, daughter of Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the President during the Wilson administration, was recovering rapidly and within 10 days or two weeks would be able to leave the hospital in Germany where she was taken after an automobile accident last week.

Directions have been given by the White House that American representatives in Germany give every assistance to Miss Tumulty.

Birth Exceeded Deaths Last Week.

There were 367 births and 163 deaths recorded in St. Louis last week. Twenty persons died of Bright's disease and a like number of heart trouble, 19 succumbed to cancer, 12 of disease of the circulatory system, 10 of pneumonia, nine of tuberculosis and eight of apoplexy. There were seven suicides, six homicides, nine accidental deaths and one death as the result of criminal carelessness.

FEW CONSTITUTION CHANGES SOUGHT EXPECTED TO PASS

PLEAS OF "LONG-HAIRED MEN" VAIN

Proposals by Bill of Rights Committee to Include That of Abolishing Punishment by Death.

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Aug. 19.—Few of the 329 proposed changes in the Constitution of 1875, which have been laid before the Constitutional convention, will be adopted by that body and submitted to the people, if the early reports of the commission which has concluded, or is about to conclude, their deliberations may be taken as an index. For by far the larger part of the suggestions are legislative in character and from the nature of the case cannot be written into the Constitution.

Three committees have reported to the convention: those on legislation, on elections and on judicial affairs. Those three committees had before them 82 proposals, of which only a very small number found their way into the recommendations of the committees. The ideas borne in three proposals before the Legislative Committee, for instance, were taken bodily in its report, while suggestions from others were adopted without acceptance of all the suggestions. This relative proposition is true also of other committees. The Bill of Rights Committee, of which former Congressman Benton is chairman, has before it 67 formal proposals, of which practically all have been rejected. Two-thirds of the changes suggested in them, according to Colonel Benton, are legislative, and have no place in the Constitution.

"Committee Firm."

Approximately 300 persons have spoken to his committee in endeavoring to get one thing or another into or out of Missouri's list of guaranteed liberties and rights. But the committee has stood pretty firm against what Benton terms "the demands of long-haired men and short-haired women."

A few changes will be suggested by the committee including that of granting jury trials in all law cases, simplification of license, abolition of the death penalty and the incorporation of the Missouri Motto in the bill of rights. Among the issues deadlocked, however, is a proposal by Dr. W. H. Blake of Marshall, "That the reading of the Bible shall not be excluded from the public schools." Under the rule of the convention, this means that the proposal will be returned to the entire body without recommendation for action on the floor.

Committees of the convention recently have voted that the State Tax Commission be made a constitutional body largely in its present form, with much the same powers and functions, and have voted that the State Public Service Commission not be made a constitutional body. There is much hostility in the convention toward the Public Service Commission.

NEGRO RAILROAD FOREMAN IS SHOT BY MAN, WHO ESCAPES

Dave Slaughter, negro, 51 years old, of 2600 North Leffingwell avenue, a foreman of laborers employed by the Missouri Pacific Railroad, was shot in the left shoulder while sitting in front of his home at 9:15 o'clock last night by one of two negroes who escaped in an automobile in which two white men were riding.

Slaughter's wife said her husband had been employed five years by the railroad and that his life had been threatened by a slender brown skin man and a mulatto, because he did not go on strike with the shopmen. She said the brown skin man did the shooting last night, firing four shots, one of which took effect.

At city hospital No. 2 it was said Slaughter would recover.

ARMED ROBBERS TAKE $250 IN BUTCHER SHOP HOLDUP

Two armed robbers who held up the grocery store and butcher shop of Harry Smith, 3459 Pennsylvania avenue, at 9 o'clock last night, as Smith was counting the day's receipts just before closing time, took $250 from Smith's pockets and two cash registers and some small change from two customers and two boys in the store at the time.

The bandits drove up in an automobile. One aimed a revolver at those in the front of the store, while the other forced Smith to give up his cash in a back room, striking him with a revolver when he failed to hold up his hands promptly. As the robbers were searching those in the front of the store, Smith telephoned police from a back room, but the robbers had escaped when the officers arrived in an automobile.

ELECTION FRAUDS INQUIRY TURNS TO THE COUNTY COURT

Barrett Also Asks County Clerk to Make Sworn Statements Regarding Appointment of Officials.

LIGHT TO FALL ON BOSS ESSEN, TOO

Attorney-General Expects to Make Same Request to the Republican Leader in the County.

Investigation of alleged wholesale fraud in the St. Louis County primary election, Aug. 1, has turned to the three members of the County Court, or administrative body of the county, which is in charge of elections, and County Clerk Seibel. Attorney-General Barrett has requested them, in letters mailed from Jefferson City yesterday, to make sworn statements concerning the appointment of precinct election officials.

The investigation, which it is hoped by those in charge of it will result in prosecution of precinct officials who are alleged to have stuffed ballot boxes or otherwise violated the ballot, will also turn to Fred Essen, Republican "boss" of the county, in search of information. The Attorney-General will make the same request of him that he has made of the county judges and clerk, in a similar letter.

The members of the County Court are Presiding Judge Wiethaupt and Judges Shields and Stille. William Seibel is County Clerk. He has been elected Republican County Committeeman from Central Township, succeeding Willis Benson, who ran unsuccessfully against Judge Shields for the nomination for Collector. Wiethaupt, Shields, Stille and Seibel are adherents of Essen, while Benson is alligned with a faction not favored by the "boss," and which, as a result, does not often get its candidates into office.

Attorney-General's Letter.

Barrett's letter to the officials was as follows:

"In the investigation of the primary election frauds in St. Louis County it is necessary that the fullest information be had regarding the appointment of certain election judges.

"Ordinarily recommendations for judges were submitted by the Republican township committeemen to the Republican County Committee, and by it in turn to the County Court. In regard to the number of judges, however, the township committeeman disclaims responsibility and his statement is contradicted by the (former) secretary of the committee.

"Before instituting any legal proceedings it would be very helpful if my assistants and myself could have the benefit of this information. I feel sure that you personally will be glad to throw all light possible on the matter. I am asking, therefore, in the interest of Amandus Brackman and Randolph Laughlin, my two special assistants in this proceedings, that you give them opportunity to talk over the matters with you and to take your sworn statements therefore.

"They will accommodate themselves to your convenience and will meet you any time or place you suggest. Will you not kindly advise them when and where it will be most convenient for you to meet them?"

Seibel, when the text of the letter was read to him last night by telephone, commented: "How can I be asked to swear to anything? I'm not in court. I don't know anything about that affair, and I don't care anything about it. However, I won't pass on the letter until I receive it."

The members of the County Court could not be reached for statements.

It has been charged that Benson's recommendations, as Central Township committeeman, for election judges in his township were disregarded, and it was in this township that the grossest frauds were alleged to have been perpetrated. Harry Kassebaum, who was secretary of the Republican County Committee before the primary, declared in a deposition given to the investigators several days ago that he found what appeared to be changes in the list Benson had submitted.

Most of the names were written in longhand, but there were apparent erasures, with names replaced in typewriting. Kassebaum asserted he had left the list under a book in a law office where the committee met while he went out to lunch. He admitted that he had taken the committeemen's lists to the office of the Watchman-Advocate, Essen's weekly paper, to place them all in typewriting for submission to the County Court, and admitted that one of Clerk Seibel's deputies had helped him do the copying.

Essen Has Remained Silent.

Examination of the lists of officials actually appointed and of Benson's recommendations has disclosed that 84 persons he had recommended were disregarded in favor of others, many of whom, some county residents have said, were unknown to them. Benson recommended six persons for each of about 35 precincts, for each of which it was necessary to choose three judges.

Essen has refused thus far to make make any statement concerning the charges of his interest in the election. His paper has not replied editorially to the charges and for the most part has ignored the investigation in its news columns.

The Executive Committee of the Clean Election League, which caused the institution of the investigation, will meet at 10:30 a. m. tomorrow at the office of J. Hal Lynch, Dolph Building, to perfect its precinct organization and work on plans for a fusion or good government ticket for the November election.

The Wellston League of Women Voters will hold a mass meeting at 8 p. m. tomorrow at the Wellston High School auditorium in behalf of the Clean Election League.

EDGAR SHELTON FEATURE OF K S D BROADCASTING

Young Pianist Gives Exceptional Renditions of Program—De Molay Orchestra Also Entertains.

Rarely have St. Louis music lovers listened to a more satisfying presentation of the tremendous sixth Hungarian Rhapsody of Liszt than that sent broadcast last night from Radio Station K S D. The immortal composition was played in a style that was beyond reproach.

The young player was Edgar Shelton, a star pupil of the noted St. Louis artist and composer, Ernest R. Kroeger, and, if indications are to be believed, a pianist from whom not only America but the world is to hear before a great while. Artistic to his finger tips, quiet and poised far beyond his years, this youth gives to all his interpretations an amazing combination of intellectuality and temperament.

Two groups of compositions almost never essayed by the student were presented by Shelton in his recital at Station K S D last night. The regulation studio numbers were not used, but in their place was as artistic a grouping of musical masterpieces as one ever finds on a recital program.

The second half of the program was entirely different from the first half. Jazz of the ultra variety ruled supreme. The De Molay orchestra of Kansas City, an organization of ten young men less than 21 years of age under the leadership of a jazz composer of merit, Bert Phelps, gave a performance for three-quarters of an hour that delighted the hearts of the jazz lovers. Fox-trots, one-steps and songs formed the program. Two of the numbers played were written by the leader of the orchestra. The singers were Roland Warmbold and W. W. Lewis. The De Molays have been attending a State conclave in St. Louis, and will depart today for their home.

BROWNS WIN 9-5, LOSE 6-5 AND DROP FROM LEAD

Phils Score 3 Runs In the Ninth Inning And Beat Cards, 8-7

By Herman Wecke.

Bill Sherdel, the little southpaw of the Cardinals, batted his club to a two-run lead with a double in the eighth inning of yesterday's game, and then in the ninth round, he permitted the Phillies to bang out four line wallops, which produced three runs and gave Wilhelm's club an 8-7 victory. About 7500 persons saw the ninth-inning massacre of the southpaws's slow ball.

With the Cubs defeating the Giants, the reverse threw the Rickeymen back to a tie for second place with the Bruins. The locals are still 8½ games behind the Giants.

While the Phillies won by pounding out four clean hits in the final inning, Sherdel is not alone to blame for the defeat. Some weak fielding in earlier innings, aided the visitors in scoring five runs. There were three errors by the Knot Holers and every one figured in the scoring.

Manager Rickey made another switch in his batting order. Ray Blades, the former Post-Dispatch League star, who was purchased from the Houston club reported in the morning and was shoved into the contest in left field. Blades made one hit, and did fairly well in the field, although it was his error that put Mokan in position to tally in the second round.

Sherdel Is Batted Hard.

Sherdel was forced to pitch at his best in many of the innings. The little left-hander was hit hard, as 12 hits attest. But previous to his ninth-round collapse he had twice pitched himself out of tight places with less damage done. But it was not on the books for the left-hander to win.

Opposed to Sherdel at the start was Jess Winters. He tarried until the eighth, when he was banished in favor of George Smith. And it was the inability of Hornsby and Bottomly to come through with a safety against this right-hander that helped to cause the downfall of the Rickeymen. Weinert hurled the ninth and fanned two of the three batters to face him.

One of baseball's peculiarities, a runner scoring on an infield fly was turned in yesterday's game. It happened in the sixth, when with the bases full, Mokan put up a fly just behind short. He was called out, but when Toporcer let the ball fall to the turf, Parkinson, who was on third, counted.

There was a general mixup and arguments pro and con for about five minutes before the mixup was finally straightened. Umpire Moran appealed to Umpire Quigley, and it was finally decided, that Mokan was out. The other base runners were allowed to move to third and second, when Lavan made a wild throw to second base, after taking Blades' heave.

Walker Pounds Out Homer.

Scoring started in the second, when Curt Walker greeted Sherdel with a homer. Mokan followed with a double and took third on Blades' fumble. He scored on Fletcher's hoist to Smith.

Winter's wildness enabled the Cardinals to go ahead in the third. One out, Sherdel and Smith walked. Toporcer's single, a line drive too hot for Leslie, filled the corners. Sherdel counted on Hornsby's long fly, while Bottomly came through with a safety that counted Smith and Toporcer.

It was in the sixth that the Phils regained the lead, and it was Sherdel's lack of control that gave the invaders an opening. With two strikes and no balls, Parkinson was hit. Williams singled and Walker drew a pass to fill the corners. Then came Lee's infield fly on which Parkinson tallied. Fletcher's infield out scored Williams with the second run of the round.

Fielding was at fault in the seventh when the Phils scored one. Henline opened with a single. Winters dumped a "sac" in front of the plate and all hands were safe when Ainsmith threw late to second. Then Wrightstone bunted and Henline scored when Sherdel threw into left field trying for the catcher at third.

Sherdel's Timely Wallop.

Sherdel put his mates back in the running with a homer in the seventh, while a real Cardinal storm came in the eighth. Mueller walked for a starter and was safe at second when Winters tossed late to second on Blades' sacrifice. Ainsmith sacrificed and Schultz for Lavan singled Mueller over. Mann ran for Schultz and stole. Then Sherdel slapped out his third hit, a double, and Blades and Mann tallied. Smith relieved Winters. Jack Smith walked and Toporcer was safe on Fletcher's fumble. There was a chance, but Hornsby fanned and Botomly fouled to Walker.

Third and final of the series today. Pfeffer and Meadows are the probable pitchers.

Toney Is Suspended For His Failure to Join Boston Braves

FRED TONEY, the right-hander obtained by the Cardinals last week, via the waiver route from the Boston Braves, will not be eligible to pitch until he has been reinstated. Toney has been suspended for his failure to report to the Boston club, it became known yesterday.

According to Manager Rickey there is some question as to who should reinstate Toney. The Cardinals contend that inasmuch as the Boston club has asked waivers on Toney, President Heydler has the right to reinstate the pitcher.

However, it is probable that Toney will have to apply to Commissioner Landis for reinstatement.

Toney is scheduled to report to the Cardinals today. However, he will be unable to pitch because of his ineligibility. Manager Rickey stated that all terms with the pitcher had been arranged satisfactorily. The Cardinals manager asserted, however, that there was a possibility that Toney would be unable to report today, as his sister is ill.

Douglas' Statement That He Phoned to Mann Corroborated

Superintendent of Apartment House States That Phil Put in a Call for Cardinal Outfielder Night of Aug. 7 —St. Louis Player Refuses to Talk.

By Leased Wire From New York Bureau of Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—The claim of "Shufflin'" Phil Douglas, former pitcher of the New York Giants, that he had put in a long distance call for Leslie Mann was today corroborated by the superintendent of the apartment house in which Douglas lives.

The superintendent declared that Douglas had put in a call for Mann at the Brunswick Hotel, Boston, the night of Aug. 7.

Douglas, who is slowly recuperating at his home here, again declared that Mann was the player who received the letter which caused his expulsion from baseball. Further than that the big pitcher declined to talk. He asserted he had made one statement and that was enough for the present.

The statement which McGraw admitted today in Chicago, deals with the kidnaping of the spitballer after he deserted the Giants about three weeks ago; his trip to the west end sanitarium; the writing of the letter which cast him adrift from baseball and his talk with Mann over the long distance telephone in Boston

When Douglas deserted the Giants recently he was discovered in an apartment house in Washington Heights. Two detectives and two special officers were sent to the apartment. They gained admittance by saying they were from the "Western Union." Brushing by a maid who opened the door, they found Douglas in bed and told him he was wanted for stealing a watch from a fan at the Polo Grounds. Douglas resented this charge and a skirmish followed in which the detectives threatened to bring their blackjacks into play. There was a Mrs. Smith and another man also in the apartment with Douglas.

Douglas Abuses Burkett.

Douglas was taken to the West 135th Street Station House. Jesse Burkett, one of the coaches of the Giants, arrived and Douglas began to abuse him. Douglas was then taken to the West End Sanitarium and was released about five days later.

According to Douglas, he then believed he was through with the Giants. On arriving at the clubhouse on the morning of Aug. 5 he wrote the letter to Mann, who was then in Boston with the Cardinals. The pitcher was called into the clubhouse by McGraw. McGraw lectured him for breaking training rules. McGraw then suspected no disloyalty, though he sent detectives after Douglas in the fear that "somebody was trying to get at him."

When Douglas found out that McGraw was not going to give him his release, he called Mann on the telephone that night and asked him to tear up the letter. But instead of tearing, Douglas declares, Mann crossed him and showed the letter to Branch Rickey of the Cardinals.

"Up to Landis," Says Mann.

Leslie Mann, the Cardinal outfielder, named by Phil Douglas, former star pitcher of the New York Giants, who was expelled from organized baseball, as the man who received the letter, which caused Douglas' expulsion, last night refused to add anything further to his earlier statement.

Mann asserted that it was up to Commissioner Landis to tell the identity of the player who received the letter, but that he would say nothing either way.

However, Mann refused to deny absolutely that he had received the letter. But he did say that he never had a long distance phone conversation with Douglas, while the Cardinals were in Boston.

Manager Rickey of the Cardinals also stated that as far as he knew there was nothing new in the Douglas case.

Landis Refuses to Name Player.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—John J. McGraw denied today that Phil Douglas was slugged and abused by detectives employed by the New York club on the occasion of his recent outbreak in New York which led to his expulsion from baseball. The statements made by Douglas in an interview given in New York were mostly known here, but McGraw denies that any unnecessary roughness was used with Phil.

"Douglas disappeared on Aug. 2," said McGraw. "About Wednesday of the following week he was located in an apartment by Jess Burkett. Two men were with him. Burkett got a couple of plain clothes men and got Douglas down stairs and into a taxicab. He had to be carried out, I believe and they took him away. They may have used force on the companions of Douglas who were mere hangers-on, looking for free drinks. They did not use any on Phil. He was taken, at the request of Judge McQuade to a sanitarium in Central Park West, kept there till the following Monday, Aug. 7, and then discharged. He came to me and promised to get back in shape on the following day. That day, I understand, he telephoned to the person he had written his letter to the preceding day and asked that it be destroyed. This indicates to me that he fully realized what he had done."

Judge Landis and McGraw both steadfastly refused to confirm the report that Leslie Mann of the St. Louis Cardinals was the man who received the Douglas letter.

"The incident is closed as far as this office is concerned," said Judge Landis.

Williams Hits 2 Four-Baggers, Raising Total to 32 — Shocker and Rommel Twirl Brilliantly — Eight Circuit Drives Knocked in the 2 Contests.

By Dent McSkimming,
Of the Post-Dispatch Sport Staff.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 19.—A knuckle ball is a valuable pitching asset when it is properly controlled. A well-behaved knuckle ball has been known to jump around in such a weird manner as to fool the catcher, the batter, the umpire and even the pitcher.

Wayne Wright, of the Browns' pitching staff, places great faith and reliance upon his freak knuckle ball. He grips the thing with the very tips of the first and second fingers of his right hand and tosses a ball that breaks in the most inconsistent, eccentric fashion.

Yesterday, in the seventh inning of the second game of a double-header here, Wright let Young push a single to center. Joe Hauser was the next batter. Wright put everything he had on the ball and the child of his effort jumped away from him in an outlandish curve that flew past Catcher Severeid and stopped only when it hit the grand stand. It was a wild pitch, very wild. Young went all the way to third from whence he scored when Hauser connected for a single. That tied the score at 5-all.

In the next inning Bing Miller hit the ball out of Connie Mack's trick ball yard for his sixteenth home run of the season and Wayne Wright of the uncontrollable knuckle ball was a beaten pitcher, 6-5.

The Browns won the first game of the day and were on the high road to first place until the seventh inning of the second encounter. Now Fohl's team is in second place, one-half game behind the Yankees who yesterday won their second straight from the White Sox.

Urban Shocker was the winning pitcher in the first game yesterday. He was effective in the numerous crises which beset him and his teammates found three Athletic hurlers for enough hits to drive in 9 runs to win by a score of 9-5.

Eight Homers in 2 Games.

When it is observed that 8 home runs were hit out of the miniature park in one afternoon then it becomes evident that good old slug and slam was the winning combination. Of all the eight homers there were but three that had sufficient reach to get over the fences at Sportsman's Park. One of these was Bing Miller's drive in the eighth inning of the second game and the others were two by Williams, his thirty-first and his thirty-second.

Williams hit the second-story cornice of a dwelling opposite the park with his first drive which came in the seventh inning of the first game and he put the second one almost as far in the first inning of the second game.

Since the second game was far the more gripping and the more significant, it needs telling first.

Ed Rommel, a pitcher, who, if it were possible to get him, would be worth a pennant to the Browns or any one of three other clubs, was an uncertain, faltering pitcher as the game opened. But, to remove all doubt as to his pitching ability, he waxed strong as the game went on and in the ninth he capped the climax by striking out Eddie Foster for the third out. This was Rommel's only strike-out of the game and it may be taken as proof that he is a resourceful, gritty fellow who becomes stronger as circumstances become less promising.

Rommel, incidentally, pitches the same sort of a freak knuckle ball that Wright employs. The only appreciable difference yesterday was that Wright could not control the thing and Rommel was at all times its master.

Foster Had Great Day at Bat Against Pitchers Used by Athletic Manager

Eddie Foster opened the attack on Rommel in the first inning with a double, his fifth hit in five official consecutive times at bat. Sisler beat out a tap to Rommel and when the pitcher threw wild past first, Foster went to third. Then Williams smote the ball a resounding wallop upon which Foster and Sisler strolled in ahead of the smiter.

That was a most promising lead and had Wright been a pitcher possessed of control as well as of curves, the Browns might have won and remained in first place.

There was early evidence that "Rasty" would have a troublesome day. He walked the first man that faced him and the next fellow singled. Then there was a sacrifice and Wright let the freak ball into Miller's ribs filling the bases. If Manager Fohl's pitchers were all going well, especially had Pruett been strong and ready, it is probable that Wright would have been withdrawn at this very point. But, with pitchers worrying along as best they may, Wright was made to remain. Perkins found him for a single and two runs scored. Galloway, the next batter, forced Perkins and the rally was over.

Tobin Doubles and Scores.

The Browns added another in the third on Tobin's double and sacrifices by Foster and Sisler and still another in the fourth on Williams' second homer of the day. Thus, it appeared that Wright would win in spite of his inclination to wildness, but that was a mere indication and as such not worth putting many dollars on. The Athletics found Rasty's knuckle twister not so baffling in the fourth for Jimmy Dykes slammed the ball into the left field sun seats for a round trip. Still, the Browns had a two-run lead, 5—3.

In the fifth Wright was yanked from the flames by a double play after three men had singled in a row. Young drove safely to left. Hauser got a hit when Sisler failed to fathom his hot grounder and Welch bunted safely. Then Big Miller, the terrible, who was destined to win the game at a later period, grounded to Foster who snapped the ball to McManus, starting a double play which brought Wright out of the hole. One runner scored while the double killing was in operation, but the next batter rolled out to Gerber.

Entering the seventh then the score was 5—4, with the Brownies leading. The Browns started a ruckus when Wright singled with one out. Tobin shot a line drive through short. Galloway got close enough to touch the ball with his glove, but he had no chance to make a catch.

Foster Finally Falls Down.

For the first time in 11 straight trips to the plate, Foster failed to deliver. He fouled to Hauser. In 10 previous batting attempts Foster had driven out five singles, one double, had walked twice and had sacrificed twice.

Sisler then was out on a pop to Hauser. This was the only real chance the Browns had to score off Rommel after the fourth inning.

As before related, the Athletics opened war on Wright in the seventh with Young's single. The wild pitch came to aid their cause and Hauser's single added to the rejoicing of the 18,000 fanatics. A double play, Gerber to McManus to Sisler, prevented further damage to Wright.

Bing Miller's homer, in the eighth, was the masterful touch which transformed Rommel's unpromising start into an admirable uphill triumph.

Nothing but fast infield work prevented the absolute rout of Wright at an early stage of the game. There were four double plays by the Brownies inner defense.

Jake Has a Busy Day.

Furthermore, Jacobson was never quiet in center field. In the fourth after Dykes had hit a home run, Jake hauled down a drive from the bat of Rommel which had distance enough to hit the left center field fence in Sportsman's Park. The wallop had all the power and height of a home run and how Jake ever got it is a marvel.

An all consuming batting attack in the fourth inning won the first game for Urban Shocker. The Brownies drove out two singles, a double and a triple in that round to score four runs and defeat Bryan Harris, who had relieved Heimach, the pitcher who started.

Shocker deserved the victory. He was hard to reach after that fourth. The A's did score on him in the sixth and eighth, but Foster's error was responsible for the run in the sixth and Welch's homer in the eighth accounted for the other. There was no such thing as consistent hitting off him.

Marty McManus' triple which scored Foster and Sisler was really the winning wallop in this inning. Williams, next batter, lifted to Tillie Walker and the left fielder dropped the ball after a long run. McManus scored. Severeid came through with a double, scoring Williams. Other runs came later, but the real heavy work of winning the game had been accomplished.

There will be no game for the Browns tomorrow. The team will play here Monday and will depart immediately thereafter for Boston.

O'Hara Wood's Brave Rally Gives Australia Right to Challenge for Davis Cup

De Gomar of Spain Wins Two Sets, Only to Lose Three in a Row—Patterson Victor in Three-Set Match With Alonzo, Who Surrenders After Hard Fight in First.

By William T. Tilden.

(Copyright, 1922.)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Aug. 19.—Australia earned the right to challenge America in the competition for the famous Davis Cup when Pat O'Hara Wood of Australia outfought Count de Gomar of Spain and nosed out a five set match 6—8, 3—6, 6—0, 6—4, 6—2. Gerald L. Patterson, world's champion, defeated Manuel Alonzo 8—6, 6—2, 6—2.

Seldom has a more bitterly fought tie been waged than the present final. Manuel Alonzo's sensational win from Wood on opening day was repeated today with O'Hara Wood on the winning end.

The first set opened with De Gomar serving. Spain went into the lead and held it to 4—3. It was a baseline duel with De Gomar having the best of the driving exchanges. At this point Wood changed his attack to the net and by brilliant volleying broke De Gomar's delivery to lead at 5—4. The Spaniard braced and by a series of sensational backhand drives off Wood's delivery, broke back and pulled even to 5 all. Service held sway to 6 all, but De Gomar was a shade the superior off the ground and by clever cross court shots again broke Wood's service and by winning his own took the set, 8—6.

Wood showed signs of pain in his right shoulder and his shots lacked their customary sting, but his clever generalship had De Gomar running all over the court, tiring him badly. Wood took the first game of the second set on his own service. Then De Gomar flashed a most remarkable series of winning shots, taking 12 consecutive points and the lead at 3—1. He was never headed to the end of the set which he won, 6—3.

De Gomar Loses His Power.

However, Wood by cleverly placing the ball in the corners, forced the Spaniard to run miles before he could put in his winning shot. The heat was taking its toll from De Gomar who was very weary at the close of the second set. Wood opened the third set with a rush and once the tired Spanish star saw the Australian was bent on running him, he threw the set. Wood was improving with every shot and ran out the set 6-0 facing little or no opposition in the closing games.

The rest benefitted Wood more than De Gomar who returned to the court a very wearied man. Wood, realizing the importance of a quick start, ran De Gomar off his feet and took the commanding lead of 5-2 on his own service. De Gomar gamely braced and in his last effort took two games by splendid driving but Wood was not to be denied and won the tenth game and set on his service, squaring the match. The end had come. De Gomar was clearly all in while Wood had a reserve power that carried him on to ultimate victory in the fifth set, 6-2.

In the early stages of the match Wood repeatedly netted which cost him the first sets. In the closing sets he gained better depth and in so doing not only cut down his errors but forced his opponent into them.

O'hara Wood held a commanding lead in the matter of placements, scoring 51 to De Goma's 36.

Patterson in Fine Form.

Gerald Patterson was in fine form against Manuel Alonzo while the Spanish star was not at his best, wasting a great many easy shots. The Australian captain was unusually good off the ground while his volleying was as always magnificent. Only in the first set did Alonzo really show his true form and once Patterson had won it, the interest seemed to leave Alonzo. I think the disappointment after the great hope of De Gomar's victory caused the temperamental Alonzo to falter.

The Australians again proved their class. There is no doubt that Patterson and Pat O'Hara Wood are great match players. With J. O. Anderson again in condition, America must face the challenge round with a great respect for their opponents.

The Spanish team, with its dashing style, delightful court manners and striking personalities, has won the hearts of the Philadelphia tennis public. Their defeat, while decisive, is one which has clearly proved them fine players and sterling sportsmen. It is to be hoped that we may see them in action in the American championship.

Good sized, enthusiastic galleries, fine courts and splendid management, wrote success on the final round even as the players proved themselves worthy of the competition by their magnificent tennis.

Beaten for the Title but Still in the Running

MISS HELEN WILLS,

Who at the age of sixteen, missed a chance to set a world's record by winning the title. Yesterday, in the final she was beaten by the six-time champion, Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory. Miss Wills' youth makes it certain that she will be an important factor in future championships. Her conqueror, Mrs. Mallory, has held the championship beginning in 1915, save for 1917, Patriotic year, and 1919 when she was injured.

Former Doubles Champions Beaten

Kinsey Brothers Defeat Williams and Washburn, U. S. Davis Cup Team, at Newport.

CASINO, NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 19.—The default entered by Henri Cochet and N. W. Niles, as they were within a point of scoring a straight set victory over the Kinsey brothers of California, in the semifinals of the Casino doubles play yesterday had a surprising aftermath in the final match today. The team all but beaten, making the most of the eleventh hour of life, which Cochet's call to military service in France had granted, turned on the internationalists and former champions, R. N. Williams II and W. M. Washburn and rapped out a five set victory. The scores were 5—7, 6—3, 6—2, 2—6, 6—3.

Defeat of the Williams-Washburn team in the past decade since it grew out of a playing partnership on Harvard College courts has been rare. This partnership has been carried into Davis Cup play as the nation's representatives in several years, almost invariably with success. It has been a champion combination in these and other years.

The veterans did not go down without a struggle. After a series of difficulties with the Kinseys' chop strokes, they pulled out the first set 7—5. Williams was placing perfectly and two games were gained in the second before the Kinseys inaugurated a lobbing game which gave them the second and third sets.

The fourth set which followed a rest period, found Williams and Washburn forcing the play successfully to prevent the lobs and they won at 6—2. But in the final set the artful topspin was interspersed with the lob by the Pacific Coast champions to good effect, their play forcing their opponents into frequent errors.

REDS HAMMER RUETHER AND DEFEAT DODGERS

By the Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 19.—The Reds won from Brooklyn today, 9 to 4, in the first game of the series. The Reds hit Ruether hard, scoring five runs in the fifth inning on six hits and a base on balls and driving the lefthander off the mound. Luque was effective except in the fifth, when the Robins combined five hits with a pass for four runs. The home team fielded perfectly and ran bases at will on Deberry, stealing six.

Helen Wills Fights Valiantly But Loses to Powerful Molla

California Girl, 16 Years Old, Convinces Gallery That She Has Best Chance to Displace Champion—Mrs. Mallory Retains Title, Score 6-3, 6-1.

By the Associated Press.

WESTSIDE CLUB, FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Aug. 19.—For the space of perhaps ten minutes today Helen Wills, a 16-year-old San Francisco miss, stood within an ace of becoming the woman tennis champion of the nation. She failed in the quest. Miss Wills did become a doubles champion, but that was due more to Mrs. Marion Z. Jessup of Wilmington, Del., than to herself. The doubles match went to three sets and was won by the Wills-Jessup pair from Mrs. Mallory and Miss Edith Sigourney, of Boston, 6—4, 7—9, 6—3.

Mrs. Jessup, short and slight, bore the brunt of the battle, and although she made an astounding total of errors for a winner, her play in exchanges that were finished by Miss Wills was amazing.

With the cheers of a colorfully bedecked crowd of 3000 enthusiasts urging her on, Miss Wills met Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory on her own terms, the "Tigress" of the courts in her own lair.

Spirited but cool, the youthful challenger held the battle, even while it ebbed and flowed in the early stages of the first set. Miss Wills was confident at the start, her stroking was as graceful and as well timed as when she was overcoming one of the outer guards. When Mrs. Mallory realized the full danger of the menace, the youthful attack failed. Miss Wills wilted in the fury of the battle and the champion, gaining strength as Miss Wills expended hers, came onto victory.

Molla's Only Rival.

The score was 6-3, 6-1, but the figures do not tell the story. Miss Wills did all that she, all that anyone had expected she could do—and she did more. She showed convincingly that if anyone is to displace Mrs. Mallory in the next few years that it will be Helen Wills.

Mrs. Mallory's style was her usual hot-shooting driving. She had fleetness of foot when she needed it—and she did often—but her game lacked the variety of flavor of the Western prodigy who drove across court with alternating speed, sent high lobs to back court and followed with whistling drives, dashing many times to the net and back to the baseline.

But Miss Wills could not stand the pace. When she lost the first set she discarded her steadiness, serene control left her and her driving became inaccurate. It was Miss Wills' inability to return those sizzling drives that lost for her. In cleverness and strategy she was the champion's equal in the first set, as the stroke analysis shows, but in the second she literally fell apart and constantly returned balls to the net or beyond the sidelines.

Turf in Fine Condition.

The day was ideal for championship tennis. A slight rain fell in the morning, dispelling the sultriness of the preceding days of the tournament and putting a tang in the atmosphere that the sun, which arrived almost simultaneously with the first exchange, could not burn out. The turf, protected by tarpaulins, was hard and made for fast play.

Miss Wills immediately penetrated Mrs. Mallory's service and took the first point and game. Mrs. Mallory won the second game and went into the lead in the third. Four times then the result alternated, the gallery responding with each exchange of the balls. But in an overwhelming burst of speed Mrs. Mallory took the last three games and the set.

The champion disclosed her unquestionable superiority in the second set, taking the first two games, losing the third which twice went to deuce and then winning the fourth game 4-0. That seemed the last straw to Miss Wills. She was still game but her play showed that she realized the helplessness of her case. The fifth game was carried to deuce, but the effort seemed the last ounce of her strength and she was outdone when she drove the match point outside to the left of Mrs. Mallory's court.

At the end she was not a forlorn, beaten figure. Her face wore the same childish imperturbable expression as at the beginning. She accepted the runner-up's cup as proudly as the smiling Molla took that of the champion—Miss Wills evidently thought she had done well enough—she had told her mother so before starting for the clubhouse this morning.

She had failed where a sister Californian, nearly twenty years ago had triumphed when only 17. In the galleries today they were comparing the winner, Mrs. May Sutton Bundy, with the loser of today, but all agreed that then Miss Sutton did not have so formidable a foe as Mrs. Mallory to beat.

In the last set of the doubles Miss Wills exhibited her almost error-proof defense and although she participated in many hot exchanges, she scored only two placements. But she handled the combined driving of Mrs. Mallory and Miss Sigourney with only three errors, less than any of her three seasoned contemporaries.

Murchison Twice Defeated by Jones In C. A. A. U. Meet

St. Louis Sprint Star Loses in Dashes—Four Records Are Shattered.

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 19.—Displaying an array of athletes who rank among the leaders of the country, Illinois Athletic Club decisively defeated all opponents in the annual Central A. A. U. track and field championships here today staged under the auspices of the Detroit News.

The Illinois Club went into the lead at the start of the meet and continued adding to its point total in almost every event. Twelve first places were captured by the meet winner, which scored 108 points. Illinois' nearest rival was Detroit Youngmen's order which gathered 17 points. Detroit Y. M. C. A. was third with nine.

Four Central A. A. U. records were shattered, all of them by athletes wearing the colors of I. A. C.

Although two of his teammates made an equal number of points, Herald A. Jones of the Illinois Club provided the greatest thrills of the day's contest. Twice he defeated Loren Murchison, his teammate and widely known sprinter, in dashes, once for a district record.

Jones Sets New Record.

Jones took the 100-yard dash from Murchison almost at the tape, cutting in front of the latter at the finish. Jones also took the 220-yard dash, leading all the way. His time was 21 4-0 seconds, 2-5 of a second faster than the former Central A. A. U. record made by K. Hamilton, C. A. A., Aug. 31, 1907.

Karl W. Anderson clipped one-tenth of a second from the 220-yard low hurdle record, winning in 24.5 seconds. The former record was held by C. A. Cory of Chicago A. A. and was made in 1913.

Jim Shanahan threw the 56-pound weight 33 feet 8½ inches. The former record was 32.11 made by Blackwood of the Chicago A. A. in 1921.

Howard B. Hoffman, former University of Michigan star now under I. A. C. colors, hurled the javelin 184 feet, 2 inches. The former record of 174 feet, 4 inches was made by Brede of the I. A. C., in Chicago a year ago.

Harold M. Osborne, Shanahan and Jones were the high point scorers of the meet, each winning 10 points.

Governor Blocks Dempsey-Brennan 'Championship' Go

Champion Leaves Michigan City in Disgust When Efforts to Hold Bout on Labor Day Finally Fail.

NOT AN "EXHIBITION," EXECUTIVE CONTENDS

Letter to Sheriff Says "Affair Is to Be Prize Fight or Public Is to Be Disappointed, if Not Defrauded."

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Jack Dempsey left Michigan City in disgust and came to Chicago today when he learned efforts to hold the bout between Bill Brennan and himself had finally failed. He arrived here in a none too cheerful frame of mind, particularly in view of the fact that the preliminary preparations have cost him in the neighborhood of $5000. Jack Kearns, his manager, was left at Michigan City to gather up the lose ends and join Dempsey here later.

Since Gov. McCray has prohibited the bout at the Indiana Summer resort there have been reports here that Charles Murray, Buffalo promoter, was making efforts to have the fight transferred to that city.

Dempsey said he expected to remain here for a day or two and then go to California to visit relatives.

Gov. McCray Acts.

By the Associated Press.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 19.—Gov. McCray today sent a letter to Sheriff William E. Anstiss, sherif of Laporte County, in which the executive declared that he is convinced that the Dempsey-Brennan bout at Michigan City is a prize fight, and therefore prohibited by law. The Governor prepared the letter several days ago but at the request of Michigan City residents delayed sending it.

In a revision of the letter, which the Governor made today before mailing it he said:

"To my mind it is clear that it either is intended that the affair is to be a prize fight or else the public is to be badly disappointed, if not defrauded. In any event there would be a violation either of the written law of the State or the unwritten law of common fairness and equity."

The Governor's Letter.

The letter sent to Sheriff Anstiss follows in part:

"My dear Mr. Anstiss. I notice from the press reports that a Dempsey-Brennan fight is being planned for Labor day at Michigan City.

"The State legal department has advised me that there is a direct and positive statute against prize fighting in this State. I have also read the statute carefully and I do not see how it could be more plainly written.

"I think I have the right to assume that any encounter in which the world's champion pugilist engages for a large sum of money is a prize fight. The publicity has all been directed to a contest of that character. At the ring side of the initial bout on July 4, placards were posted reading: 'Dempsey will defend his title here on Labor day.'

"All the writers of the sport columns have constantly referred to the engagement as a fight. Seats have been on sale at prize fight prices. The press has reported seats advertised at $27.50 for ringside and box seats at $22 for seats in the inner circle and $11 for seats in outer circles. In all the arena is planned to seat 60,000 persons.

"Prominent sport writers have referred to Brennan as a challenger for Dempsey's title. It is reported that Dempsey's manager, Kearns, has said that the bout will draw close to $500,000. From all this advance evidence I feel that I am perfectly safe in considering this affair NOT a mere boxing or sparring match, but as a prize fight, and, therefore, prohibited by law.

"Inasmuch as the law is plain and unmistakable, it must NOT be violated.

"I cannot consistently or conscientiously permit our laws to be openly and flagrantly violated in one section of Indiana and at the same time have troops stationed in other parts of the State to see that the laws are upheld. I therefore demand of you as the law enforcement officer of Laporte County that you do your full duty and see to it that the proposed fight does NOT take place."

Although officials of Laporte County have said that they are without authority to stop the bout as it is not a prize fight, but simply a boxing exhibition, the Governor has expressed confidence that they will forbid the match following receipt of the letter.

Legion Post Withdraws.

By the Associated Press.

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 19.—The Michigan City Post of the American Legion, under whose auspices the Jack Dempsey-Bill Brennan bout was to have been held Labor Day, informed Gov. McCray today that it would withdraw from the exhibition. Announcement of the withdrawal was received from Earl D. Brown, chairman of the post's boxing commission.

By the Associated Press.

MADISON, Wis., Aug. 19.—Local sporting promoters are investigating the possibility of staging the Brennan-Dempsey fight, scheduled for Labor Day, in Madison, on Aug. 29, during the convention of the Thirty-Second Division, as a result of refusal of Gov. McCray of Indiana to permit the exhibition in that State.

Negro Champion Lightweight Would Have Knocked Out Tendler in a Hurry, He Says—Knockout of Frank Erne One of Smartest Stunts in Gans' Career.

By Robert Edgren.

(Copyright, 1922.)

Joe Gans never drew a $400,000 gate at any of his great championship fights. In that one particular Benny Leonard has it over Joe. And Benny Leonard is a first-class fighter and a real champion, although all he could command in his late fight with Tendler was a close "newspaper decision."

But the more Benny fights the more apparent it is that Benny never was and never will be "another Joe Gans." The Joe Gans who is now only a shadowy tradition of the ring never would have fought an uphill fight half the way against Lew Tendler, and worked his way painfully to the front in the latter end of a 12-round battle. Especially so if Joe Gans had the same reasons for wanting to put Tendler aside.

Leonard is clever and he can hit hard. He is cautious, sometimes, and sometimes he throws caution to the winds. He has a fighting brain. He is a student. When he fights a man the second time he always knows how to beat him. If he fights Tendler again—as of course he will while $400,000 gates are in prospect—he will knock Tendler out if he wants to.

Early in his career Benny's ambition was to win all fights with clean knockouts, and usually he made good. Perhaps, like a number of other very clever boxers, he has seen the commercial advantage attached to a series of hard but indecisive battles, each with a big purse. Perhaps he has found himself so shy of real opponents that he might be satisfied with merely outpointing Tendler and saving him for a rainy day, the way a squirrel hides away nuts in a hollow tree.

Tendler Not an Easy Mark.

But the chances are Benny found Tendler dangerous, and that he'll use what he learned of Tendler's style to polish him off in a workmanlike manner next time they meet.

But if it had been Joe Gans in the ring with Tendler at Jersey City! That would have been different. Joe Gans fought and beat men with whom Tendler never classed. Joe Gans knocked out Frank Erne, one of the fastest and cleverest lightweights who ever held the title, with a single punch. Gans had fought Erne years before, and had lost when accidentally blinded by a wide cut over his eye, supposed to have resulted from a butt. But he knew all about Erne. They were matched to fight six rounds later in Philadelphia. Gans was there. Erne went to Philadelphia the day of the bout and took the next train back to New York. It was with him. He said he was tipped off in Philadelphia that he was to be "tricked" out of his title. Later the two met at Fort Erie.

After the fight Gans told me that he knew Erne had a trick of feinting and drawing quickly back just about 12 inches, where he would stop and come in again with a blow. The first time Erne feinted Gans hooked his right with all his power at a spot 12 inches back of Erne's chin. Erne's quick pullback brought his chin to that spot just as Gans' gloved fist arrived. A clean knockout! Gans was world's champion in the shortest championship fight on record.

Joe Gans Was Student.

That was Joe Gans—a student. When Joe began fighting in Baltimore he once went to a theater to see Bob Fitzsimmons box. He was so fascinated by Fitzsimmons' skill that for weeks he followed Bob from town to town, watching every performance and studying Bob's action prying down under the actual physical movements of the great champion's body and legs and arms to learn the impelling motive in his mind. At last he believed that he knew what Fitzsimmons was thinking while in action, although, like Kid McCoy, he told me he believed Fitz held much fighting knowledge in reserve, and that Fitz was the master strategist of the ring, deeper and more cunning than any other.

At any rate, having learned all he could of Fitzsimmons' mental processes, Gans went out to fight, and his success was immediate. For several years he was king of them all. There were some black marks against Joe Gans' record, but if some of his fights looked a bit shady—and were shady—he had a reason that the public didn't know.

Why Fights Were Jokes.

Late in his career Gans came to me one day and said: "Mr. Edgren, you've written that certain fights of mine were fakes."

"Yes—I think they were."

"You had it right," said Joe. "But from now on I'm my own man and I'll never fight another crooked fight while I live. I just want you to know how it was. I was always in debt to a man who was handling my business. No matter how many fights I had I always owed him money, and he had me tied up so that I had to do what he ordered me to. I've broken away. I'm free, and from now on I give you my word my fights will be straight and I'll win every one as long as I can."

Joe made his word good. Unfortunately he had only a few years more. But he fought like a champion every time.

Gans had a peculiar style. He usually stood with both forearms raised in front of him, and moved very little. He was no fancy dancer like modern boxers, wasting all his force in foolish and unnecessary footwork.

Gans, the Japanese Nobleman.

Joe reminded me of the story about a Japanese nobleman long ago who had no skill in sword play, and who offended the greatest swordsman in Japan and fought a duel with him. The nobleman knew he would be killed, but an old uncle who was a cunning fencer gave him good advice.

"Take your defensive position," he said, "and no matter what happens you must not move hand or foot, or even blink an eye. Stare straight at your enemy and wait, even if you are being killed. 'It is your only chance."

The nobleman followed instructions. The master swordsman fenced dexterously, feinted, made tentative cuts and thrusts, but the nobleman never moved an inch or showed the quiver of an eyelash. He was cut on forearms and slashed on face and neck until blood streamed down, but he didn't stir. Suddenly the master swordsman drew back, laid his sword on the ground, and bent his knee.

"I surrender to your mercy," he said. "You are a far greater master than I am. I know that you have determined not to move until you end my life with a single blow—and that when you move I die."

That was Joe Gans' way in the ring—except that Joe was the real master. In his poised, motionless way he waited for an attack, brushed aside blows, and when he saw his sure opening he drove crashing home the winning blow.

No other fighter has ever perfected that style of fighting.

Gans could fight uphill. In two fights Dal Hawkins, who had the greatest left hand knockout punch I've ever seen, dropped Gans for a nine count. Each time Joe got up, steadied himself, and knocked Hawkins out!

Gans Would Have Stopped Lew.

If Gans had been in Leonard's place against Tendler, and Tendler had hammered at his body with the left and dropped a constant string of overhand rights across. Gans would have timed and knocked him out, without question. Gans fought Langford, Walcott and many great fighters who were bigger and stronger. Langford won a decision over him—but who couldn't Langford beat when he was young?

Perhaps, if Benny Leonard had the great lightweights of Gans' time to fight he might be "another Joe Gans."

But, after seeing them all, I'll say there never has been another since Joe passed along.

Women Athletes In International Track Meet Today

United States Team Handicapped by Injury to Miss Rothbone and Miss Batson.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—Ready for the crack of the pistol, the 67 women athletes representing America, England, France, Switzerland and Czecho-Slavokia, are ready for the first international track meet for women, to be held at Pershing Stadium tomorrow.

The meet has aroused the greatest of interest in Europe. There has been the keenest rivalry between the French, British and American teams. The latter especially have been watched in their daily training periods at the Colombes Stadium. Their practice methods, radically different from those of the French, have been discussed at length in the French newspapers.

All agree that the competition will be close and lays between France, England and the United States. The Czecho-Slavokia team may produce some surprises. Switzerland has entered in the 1000-meter race, the javelin throw and the shot-put and has disregarded the other events.

The American team is unfortunate in losing the services of Miss Leona Rothbone of Panama, who wrenched her ankle Thursday and will not compete. Captain Flora Batson of New Orleans, is still suffering from a weak ankle, the result of a sprain ten days ago at the Colombes Stadium. She may be unable to compete in the hurdles, but it is certain she will start in the sprints and the relay. She is the best hurdler on the American team and would likely have given Mlle. Therese La Rose, the French record-holder, a great contest.

The elimination on trials will start at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning, when the 60-meter sprint, 100-yard dash, running high jump, running broad jump, standing broad jump and the 300-meter race will be run. Four finalists will be chosen from them to compete in the afternoon.

The program consists of 60-meter sprint, 300-meter run, 1000-meter run, 100-yard dash 100-yard hurdles, standing broad jump, running broad jump, running high jump, javelin throw, shot put, 440-yard relay.

Points will be totaled 5 to the winner, 3 to second, 2 to third and 1 to fourth places, excepting the relay race, where the winning country will be credited with 9 points, the second with 6 and the third with 3.

The Americans will give an exhibition during the competition of a hop, step and jump and of throwing the basketball and baseball.

The following records have been accepted by the International Federation of Feminine Athletics, which held its first session Friday at which Dr. Stewart was elected vice president: 60-meter sprint, 8 seconds flat, held by Mlle. Edison Says Poison Gas and Powerful Airplanes Will Be Decisive Factors in Next War

Inventor Believes Conflicts Will Not Be Made Impossible Until Methods Are So Deadly Nations Will Be Afraid to Fight.

This is the third of a series of four articles on "Edison, the Man," by Shaw Desmond, noted Irish author and publicist. The last one, to appear next Sunday, will be "Life Beyond the Grave."

By SHAW DESMOND,

The Noted Irish Publicist and Author.

THE one intellect in the world which might conceivably be able to abolish war from the earth is that of Edison. As he said to me: "There will one day spring from the brain of science a machine or force so terrible in its potentialities, so absolutely terrifying, that even man, the fighter, who will dare torture and death in order to inflict it, will be appalled, and so will abandon war forever."

A belief that we are not at the end of world wars is shown by Edison's remarks. "Preparation, not provocation," for America, as for the world, would appear to sum up his attitude, and he believes that by being ready such wars are likely to be prevented, and that part of this preparation should be such a development of deadly invention and man-killing methods that humanity will be afraid to go to war.

Being anxious to get his views upon what has been regarded by so many scientists as the force which probably will, by reason of its terrible possibilities, make war impossible—atomic energy, I asked Edison whether there was any prospect, now, that Prof. Rutherford would find the means of unleashing such energy.

The great inventor said: "So far, I cannot quite see how this force can be harnessed and utilized. There is nothing to hang the imagination on. It may come some day. They are experimenting along the lines of gathering information at my laboratory here."

Upon being informed that an "atomic engine" for the utilizing of this new force had been advertised in England, Edison laughed. "The atomic engine is only a dream," he said. "It is the French scientists who are always sending these things out.

May Harness the Earth.

"Before we harness atomic energy, the force of which is indeed practically limitless, we shall solve other problems. For instance, we shall possibly harness and utilize the motion of the earth through space. Also a vitally important problem and an easy source of power is the rise and fall of the tides. Another source of enormous power is that of the volcano, and as a matter of fact they already are getting some 8000-horsepower from the volcanoes in the Appenines, the backbone of Italy.

"But so far as atomic energy is concerned, there is nothing in sight just now." Edison paused a moment, and then added thoughtfully: "although tomorrow there might be something. Some quite dissimilar but collateral problem might open up this field by accident. Very often it happens that a discovery is made whilst working upon quite another problem."

"Assuming that one day this atomic energy is freed," I said, "could it be projected in the next great world war across the Atlantic to destroy buildings, say in New York, Berlin or London? This is asked, as eminent scientists have stated that there is enough atomic energy in half a glass of water to raise the British navy to the top of the highest mountain in the world."

"There would be nothing impossible in such a conjecture, once the secret has been discovered. It could be turned into electricity and projected to any part of the world from any other part. Neither the Atlantic nor anything else would interpose an obstacle. The force in such energy is gigantic and illimitable."

Making War Impossible.

In reply to the question which half the world is asking "Would the coming of such a force abolish war?" Edison said, after thinking a moment:

"War might be made impossible even now by poison gases and aeroplanes of new and powerful types, even without atomic energy. The way to make war impossible is for the nations to go on experimenting and to keep up-to-date with their inventions, so that war ultimately will be unthinkable and therefore impossible.

"War will never be made impossible until men are convinced by definite demonstration that it is impossible. Germany in particular must be shown that any dreams she may entertain of revenge and of 'whipping France' cannot materialize—that the world even now has such weapons that the dream of a new Teutonic world-power can never be revived—that mankind has passed the stage of the goose-step and the sword. War has already been made an affair of chemicals—and no longer picturesque display. The instant that it can be demonstrated to the German brain that with the new inventions Germany can get as good as she gives, she will see the futility of war and revenge.

Gas and Planes in Next War.

And then Edison said slowly and with emphasis: "The next war will be fought out with poison gas. Gas and the aeroplane will be the decisive factors.

Asked whether the airship would be likely to be used in the next war, Edison said, without hesitation: "I believe that airships of the Zeppelin type will be used in the next war—but the type will probably be 'rigid.' These air balloons, despite so many opinions to the contrary, still have a show."

Asked how far the submarine would play its part in the next world war, having regard to the concentration of the naval experts of the world upon the under-water as opposed to the over-water ship, Edison replied:

"I do not think the submarine will play any part except against merchant vessels, because there will be little else for it to attack. What it is urgent for America to do at once is not to wait for the outbreak of the next war, but to experiment now for preventive devices by merchant ships against the submarine, so as to have plenty of time to prepare." Again he repeated, with a certain warning in his voice: "Now, not tomorrow or next year, is the time to go ahead with these."

Protective Devices.

Edison was asked for his ideas on such protective devices and the lines of such precautionary experiments against the submarine.

"In front is the development of listening devices for the detection of the submarine and the substitution of the ear for the eye, which indeed is already being done, and I believe that we shall be able to locate the exact whereabouts of the submarine in the future as plainly as if the boat were on the surface. In fact, I go so far as to say that we shall so develop such a 'finder' that the submarine to all intents and purposes will cease to exist, certainly cease to be a 'submarine' to the senses."

"Then you think the over-water battleship, etc., is doomed, as the British Admiral, Sir Percy Scott, the world's first authority on the subject, and others, have stated?"

"Surface Ship Doomed."

"Absolutely. The overwater ship is doomed, as are the dreadnought and other vessels of this type, because of the airplane and the new developments in flying which are showing and will show themselves. These overwater ships, for instance, would have no chance whatever at night.

Northcliffe In Anecdote

Tales Illustrating Famous English Publicist's Dynamic and Whimsical Career Gleaned from Biographical Material; Many Characteristic Stories Picturing His Personality Told by Isaac F. Marcosson in His "The Business of War."

Extracts Reveal Editor as Energetic, Sagacious and Optimistic; He Gave Attention to Business During Business Hours, But Refused to Listen to Shop Talk After Dinner, When He Enjoyed Ragtime Phonograph Records and Cigars.

ALFRED HARMSWORTH, first Viscount Northcliffe, British publisher and political giant, who died last Monday, was, as well as "the most admired and the most vilified man in Great Britain," personally one of the most interesting and most talked-about world figures of the day. The Post-Dispatch herewith presents anecdotes illustrating his dynamic and whimsical character gleaned from published biographical material.

Stories told by Isaac F. Marcosson in "The Business of War," quoted exactly except where prolixity or the intervention of time and its changes prevent, follow:

HOW THE MINISTRY OF MUNITIONS CAME ABOUT

In the London Times Northcliffe had published the fact that the British troops in France were impotent before the German guns because of the famine of high explosives. The Times had the facts and spoke with the authority of confirmed information. There was no response from Government or public. It takes a great deal to stir the British mind. So Northcliffe proceeded to give it the jolt of its history.

One morning in May, 1915, the telephone bell rang in the office of Thomas Marlowe, editor of the Daily Mail, at Carmelite House. "The Chief wants to see you," was the message that came over the wire. Northcliffe was simply "Chief" to his associates.

Marlowe went up to the high, book-lined study where Northcliffe sat deep down in an upholstered chair, his big head forward, his broad shoulders squared, the picture of strength. He handed Marlowe a manuscript, saying: "Read this."

Marlowe read the four typewritten pages. They contained the now famous editorial: "The Tragedy of the Shells—Kitchener's Grave Mistake."

Marlowe looked up. "Do you realize that this is a terrific shock, that it will shatter an idol?" he asked.

"Yes," replied Northcliffe, grimly; "but isn't it true?"

"Yes," was the answer. And the editorial blazed forth the next morning, kindling a fire of abuse, revolt, indignation, even ostracism. But the Northcliffe papers stuck to the task.

The result was the Ministry of Munitions.

LONDON THOUGHT HE WAS INSANE

In 1906 Northcliffe saw Santos-Dumont hop 100 feet with an airplane. On the spot he became convinced not only that flying was the coming sport, but that airmanship would be a great factor in future warfare. He offered a prize of $50,000 for the first mechanical flight from London to Manchester in 24 hours, with not more than two stops. England thought he was insane. The offer became a jest and joke of press and public. Punch, for instance, immediately offered $10,000,000 to anyone who could fly to Mars!

Since his death it has been reported that Lloyd's even insured him against having to pay the prize, for a premium of $3000.

One of Northcliffe's staff wrote an editorial on aviation, saying that while it was bound to come, it would be long delayed, because all progress is slow. The next morning he received a thumping telegram from his chief, saying: "Stop writing such rot. The airplane will come much quicker than you think. Be optimistic about it."

EMPLOYE WAS TOO EASILY SATISFIED

Northcliffe once met a subeditor in the corridor of the Daily Mail Building and asked him how he was getting along.

"Splendidly, thank you," was the reply.

"How long have you been with me?"

"Six months, my Lord."

"What money are you getting?"

"Seven pounds a week."

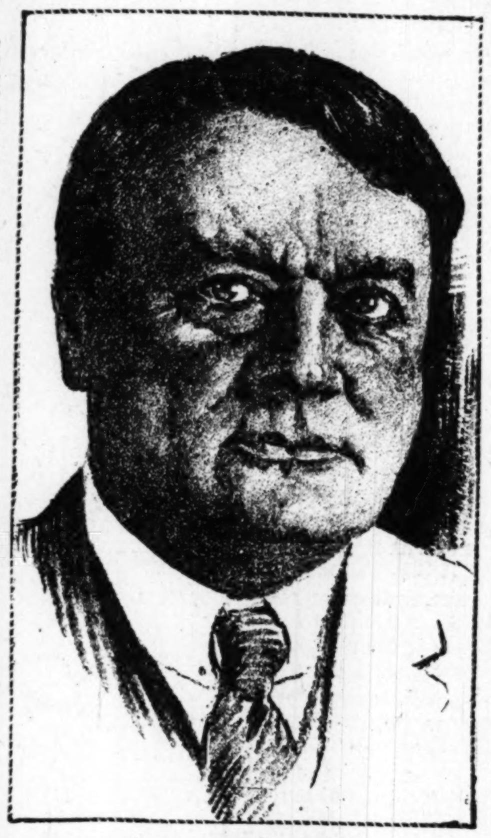
"Are you happy and contented?"

"Yes, but I have lots of leisure."

"Then you are not the man for me. I don't want any member of my staff to be happy and contented on seven pounds a week."

BEGAN WORK AT 5 A. M. IN SUMMER; 6 IN WINTER

Northcliffe began his work at 5 a. m. in summer and at 6 in winter. From his bed he dictated plans and policies. Before the average Englishman was out of his tub Northcliffe had done a day's work. He had read all his own newspapers and marked them with criticisms; he had outlined the program for his evening paper; he had talked over the telephone with members of his staff and picked up the thread of things that happened through the night. Once, motoring with Marcosson to one of the publisher's country places, they had hardly left the light of London behind them when he suddenly ordered the chauffeur to stop. "There is something I must telephone to the Times," he said. It was a characteristic act.



LORD NORTHCLIFFE.

NORTHCLIFFE, at the invitation of Joseph Pulitzer, on Jan. 1, 1901, directed a Twentieth Century Edition of the morning New York World, based on his ideas of the paper of the future. The issue was in thirty-two four-column pages, with all stories of 250 words or less. Northcliffe's "portable, pocketable, logically arranged journalism," however, has never been taken up except in the cases of a few individualistic publications.

The staff of the World, as a joke, came to work that night in evening dress. Northcliffe espied one editor in business clothes and remarked briskly: "That man has the right sense of humor; he shows some originality, too." Later the editor was invited to join the staff of the Daily Mail and became one of its principal stockholders.

On Oct. 26, 1917, Northcliffe, visiting St. Louis, called a Post-Dispatch reporter to his side on the Ridgedale Country Club golf links and said: "That grand old gentleman, Joseph Pulitzer, was my very intimate friend. I owe to Mr. Pulitzer the founding of the London Mirror (pictorial daily), which has a circulation of 2,500,000 copies an issue."

He told of the Twentieth Century Edition, and concluded: "On the basis of my experiment with the World I founded the London Mirror. It was a success from the start."

COULDN'T WORK WITH MEN WHO WERE ALWAYS LATE

Northcliffe might have had any post in the gift of the Government, but he steadily refused. He knew that to take office would weaken his power. Before the Asquith reorganization he was widely mentioned for Food Controller. He resented the suggestion, saying: "I could never afford to work with 23 men (that was the original number of Cabinet Ministers) who are always late."

TOO MUCH EXECUTIVE TALENT IN THE CABINET

He justified his efforts for the war-time reorganization of the Cabinet into a smaller and more compact body to Marcosson with the explosive questions:

"Could 23 Lincolns have run your Government during the Civil War? Could 23 Grants have won it?"

"No," replied Marcosson.

RAGTIME RECORDS AND CIGAR AFTER DINNER

Save in a great national crisis, Northcliffe's work for the day ended when the time for dinner came. No guest in any of his houses might talk shop from that time on. On an evening Marcosson spent with a few other guests at Elmwood, after dinner Northcliffe said: "Let's have the phonograph." He stretched himself on a huge couch, puffed away at a cigar of dreadnaught size and luxuriated in American "rag-time" that ranged from "Down in Tennessee" to "Alexander's Ragtime Band."

HANSOM ONLY A MEANS TO AN END

Once Northcliffe wanted a taxi at the Times office. When he reached the street the doorman told him it was impossible to get one, but that he had secured a hansom.

"Where shall I go, my Lord?" asked the cabby.

ADMITTED MAGAZINE A COMPLETE SUCCESS

Northcliffe was 16 years old and in school when he embarked on his journalistic career with a magazine—his own particular idea. Even then he had the courage and optimism that were his two principal assets. In the first number appeared a naive announcement that was the keynote of his career. It read: "I have it on the best authority that this paper is to be a marked success."

In the second number he published this: "I am glad to say that my prediction as to the success of the magazine proved correct." Characteristic of the future controller of the Daily Mail was the announcement the next month of a "Grand Extra Double Summer Holiday Seaside Number of the Magazine."

HIS ADVICE TO THE BEGINNING JOURNALIST

When anxious fathers came to Northcliffe to ask how their sons should begin journalism, he invariably listed as requisite: "The best possible education, a knowledge of French and a period of initiation in a provincial office."

HIS CONCEPTION OF AN IDEAL NEWSPAPER

Northcliffe's conception of the ideal newspaper, as quoted by Marcosson:

"Let one man—the controller—be in final authority; give him the best experts obtainable and let them alone. A newspaper should be the consensus of the best brains of the best specialists—the clearing house of the quickest and most accurate news from all theaters of world events; it should have the judgment of daily consultation. Make the paper pay its way, regardless of advertising, and independent of everybody. If readers don't like it, they can burn it. If it does not suit advertisers, they can stay out."

HOW HE MET THE FUTURE MRS. ALFRED HARMSWORTH

When Alfred Harmsworth was a young boy the family lived in St. John's Wood, next to a select seminary for girls of 12 to 16, and frequently the boys' ball would be knocked over the fence into the seminary garden, with ensuing remonstrance from the principal. Once when the ball came over the fence into the garden, the story goes, a graceful, dark-eyed girl of 13 took possession of it, and when Harold Harmsworth clambered after it she refused to give it up. Later Alfred literally dropped in and by a combination of tact and blarney not only got the ball but got the girl's confidence and promise to return the ball whenever it again came over into the garden. Tradition has it that six years later she became Mrs. Alfred Harmsworth.

LAW BOOKS HAD "JOLLY FINE COVERS"

He was altogether apathetic to whatever attraction his father imagined the law courts, to which he was taken during important trials, would have for him, merely perceiving in some of them good "copy," and when his father presented him with two calf-bound elementary treatises on law he merely remarked: "They've got jolly fine covers." There is no record of his ever having opened them.

HOW THE OBJECT LESSON WORKED

Alfred's father, a lawyer, was opposed to his journalistic ambitions and wanted him to become a lawyer. To discourage Alfred he arranged an object lesson, designed to work a cure by showing the dark side of the profession. He got a friend to take the youthful aspirant to see the printing of the first edition of a London evening paper.

On the way the friend, a newspaper man, di-

English Magistrates Said to Be Lenient With Thirsty Visitors Who Seek Surcease From Sorrows of the 18th Amendment.

By CHARLES G. ROSS,

Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

LONDON, July 30. (By Mail).

ONE hears on all hands—in the Commons, from American observers and from the Englishman "in the street"—that England, of course, will pay her debt to the United States. Certainly there is no thought of repudiation. But when an Englishman discusses the topic, he is apt to introduce the fact that the great bulk of the money lent by the United States to this country was re-lent by England to other allies for the prosecution of the war. The feeling is undoubtedly prevalent here that there should be, at least, a general scaling down of the war debts.

It is questionable whether the average Londoner realizes the antipathy to debt cancellation that exists widely in the United States. He gets his impressions of American opinion, very largely, from news dispatches that reflect opinion on the Atlantic seaboard, where the correspondents of the London papers are stationed. In New York and international financial circles, as is known, there is a strong sentiment for debt reduction or cancellation—a sentiment which, reported here, gave rise to a misunderstanding of the American attitude and induced extreme hopes which are in process of being dissipated. But the hope still persists that an understanding in favor of some reduction will be reached.

The desire of the Government to ease the British taxpayer's heavy burden in this manner is likely to become more poignant with the successive publication of budgets showing $250,000,000 required annually to pay the interest on the debt to the United States.

Tourists, Thirsty and Otherwise.

LONDON swarms with American tourists of all varieties. Some "do" the Tower and the Abbey; others, while they're "quartered safe out here," prefer the surcease to be obtained from the sorrows of the eighteenth amendment. The English Magistrates, one gathers from the newspapers, are inclined to be lenient when an American who has been arrested for too great convivdality pleads in extenuation that he is from a "dry" country.

In the main, the Americans to be seen here are neither self-effacing nor blatant, but an average lot of healthy-minded, polite people, with a decent amount of reserve. Unhappily for the good reputation of the United States abroad, there is another type that makes itself conspicuous. I am told by Americans who have watched many successive crops of tourists in London that this year has brought more of the latter class than usual.

Americans here are relating as illustrative of the character of some of the 1922 tourists, a story of an American woman who recently visited Westminster Abbey. The woman's remarks, delivered in a raucous tone, excited the laughter of two Englishwomen, whereupon she advanced upon them, placed her hands upon her hips and announced: "I've a good mind to 'crown' you dames!" What followed is not known, since all the Americans within earshot beat a shame-faced retreat.

Stonewall Lloyd George.

THERE are no visible signs of any weakening of Mr. Lloyd George's power. What an adroit opportunist, what a master of political strategy he is! Some of our so-called political leaders, who scurry to the White House for aid and comfort against the enemy, might take a few lessons from his cool daring.

Recently the scandal over the award of honors brought on a near-"crisis." Three hundred members of Parliament signed a petition for an investigation. Many were members of the Coalition (of Unionists and a wing of the Liberals) which keeps the present Government in power against the opposition (the Independent Liberals, Labor and the Tory Die-Hards).

Did the Premier yield to the organized demand for an inquiry? He did not. He bristled. He said the Government would stand or fall on the issue. By making the matter a party issue, he took the wind out of the sails of the Government supporters who had signed the petition. They could not press their demand without going against the Government. They wilted. Lloyd George had again proved his mastery.

The upshot was a decision to name a commission that will have to do, not with past awards of honors, but with future awards. There's a vast difference.

Hard to Get In.

GETTING into the House of Commons is a complicated process, almost as difficult as effecting the industrial upheaval necessary to taking a hot bath in a small Continental hotel. I first broached the question of a ticket for myself to an English newspaper man. He was rather doubtful about it; admission was hard to gain—well, rather—because of a certain uneasiness due to the Sinn Fein. I saw that little headway was to be made in that direction, so I turned to an American newspaper man stationed in London. He said, "Sure."

The ticket came presently, for the session on the second day following with the compliments of Sir Arthur Willert. Sir Arthur is an official of the Foreign office designated to deal with the American press. He was once the correspondent of a London paper in Washington and is supposed to know the peculiar psychology of that peculiar being, the American journalist. Whenever an American reporter wants to know anything at the Foreign Office he goes to Sir Arthur; the British reporters go to someone else. The system is another expression of the compartmented way that the British have of doing things—of that philosophy that requires the Britisher on his travels to carry a dozen or so separate boxes and bags.

Well, the ticket came, admitting to the members' gallery. After running the gantlet of some half dozen functionaries, each with a gold chain of office about his neck, and at the end signing a pledge not to create a disturbance in the gallery, I was admitted.

The trouble was worth while if only for the opportunity of seeing Lloyd George in action. He was there with the rest of the Cabinet on the first row of the benches to the right of the bewigged speaker. Questions addressed to the Government by various members were being answered. The Prime Minister was the target of several. They were just the sort of questions that the reporters in Washington fire at Mr. Harding or Mr. Hughes in the regular "press conferences." Lloyd George answered each with neatness and dispatch; he was suave, unruffled—master of himself and the situation. It was easy to imagine the effect he would create when in fiery mood. I did not see him so. His stunt finished, he left the Chamber, and the House soon fell into somnolence under the reading of an agricultural report.

Our own Congressmen have better seats to sleep in than the straight-backed benches in the Commons.

How They Say It.

AMERICANS are fond of drawing comparisons between themselves and the English, and between American and English life. There are as many diferent kinds of Americans and so many complexities and seeming paradoxes in the English character that any comparison is apt to be misleading. If I had to make one that would disparage neither people, I should take as text the English sign, "The Public Are Requested Not to Walk on the Grass," and its American counterpart, "Keep Off the Grass."

From those two ways of saying the same thing, you may generalize as you please, but whatever the conclusion, you are likely to be half wrong.

Support the Nominee.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

AT the recent primary election I voted for Mr. Long. My reason for voting against a friend, whom I esteem and admire, is dead sea fruit. By voting the Democratic ticket at the primary election I tacitly assented to abide by the result of the election and support the nominated candidate.

No Democrat who voted at the primary should "ambush his party from the rear." Section 4839 of the Revised Statutes provides: "No person shall be entitled to vote at any primary unless a qualified elector of the precinct and known to affiliate with the political party named at the head of the ticket he calls for and attempts to vote or obligates himself to support the nominees of said party at the following general election."

Every person, Republican or Democrat, voting the Democratic ticket at the primary election obligated himself to support the nominees of that party. Democrats should not be chagrined or displeased if Reed converted 20,000 or more Republicans; they should be delighted. The conclusive presumption is that the electors will obey the law and execute their implied agreement. Dyed-in-the-wool Democrats and converts to Democracy should rally to the support of James A. Reed and in November we will have a triumphant Democracy, and Missouri will be redeemed. T. J. ROWE.

Commercializing the Flag.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

IT seems that it is high time that a law be passed to prevent the use of the American flag for advertising purposes. I have been unable to associate the ordinary store sale with national patriotism and am at a loss to understand why our flag should be waved on such occasions. Nevertheless, certain well-known department stores of this city make a practice of using American flag decorations to announce their sales. If this practice is followed by all merchants, it won't be long before the American flag will become the emblem of 99 cent sales, and the patriots will have to find another flag to represent their nation.

A RESPECTER OF THE FLAG.

On Preventing Strikes.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

AS a striking miner, I was very much interested in Mr. Festus J. Wade's article wherein he desired that measures be taken by business and labor organizations for the permanent prevention of strikes. I was rather disappointed that Mr. Wade had no suggestions of his own to make along these lines. Now, as strikes are usually caused by the cutting down of wages or by a desire on the part of the workers to better their condition, it seems to me that, if the workers of the country were assured a decent living wage and not a mere precarious existence, strikes would be unknown. Has this angle of the question ever struck you, Mr. Wade? DAVID SHAW.

The Nurses' Bill.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

YOU know the words:

Wrong forever on the throne."

These lines were born in a day of injustice to a race of people in a country where "all men are free and equal." Insidiously, wrongs creep in through the connivance of some sect or faction. But there is a sense of justice in this free land of ours that resents special privileges and when public opinion is aroused—which is nothing more than the public weighing the injustice of one class against the injustice purposely and cunningly devised and inflicted by another for unjust financial gains—then I say public opinion brings the malicious to account.

Have you recently known of a more unjust bill than Senate bill No. 380? Do you think it can stand against the righteous indignation it has aroused in the public mind as the public has become informed? I know that it cannot stand. I have talked with State officials, from the Governor down, and when they see the cunning intrigue of the Graduate Nurses' Association, they wonder that such an unjust bill got by. Do you want to see it repealed? I can tell you how it can be done. If you are ready, we will do it next January, but we must act soon. Write me at 845 Pierce Building.

Thanks Where It Is Due.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I WAS very much pleased to see a letter of thanks in the paper from the president of the Missouri Pacific Railroad thanking the doctors, nurses and the people of Sulphur Springs for helping and doing what they could at the wreck at Sulphur Springs. But there was not a word of thanks or appreciation said by him to the striking shopmen, who, although engaged in an industrial war against the company, in the name of humanity offered to and did go down there and clear that wreck. I believe in giving credit where credit is due and I believe these men should be thanked for the humane way they handled the situation.

COMPULSORY ARBITRATION.

The outstanding feature of President Harding's strike message, notwithstanding it was "sicklied o'er" with hesitancy and postponement, was the proposed strengthening of the transportation act. He wants that law amended so that both carriers and workers will be obliged to abide by the decisions of the Railroad Labor Board. Remarking that compulsory arbitration was "deliberately omitted" from the original act, his suggestion, in effect, is that compulsory arbitration now be deliberately inserted into that law.

The President undertakes to justify his recommendation by citing the peril to industry and to public health and life when the power to suspend a basic utility is vested in a special group. The public welfare, he insists, cannot be subjected to the hazard of interruption in the functioning of indispensable utilities. Though transportation is the subject under discussion the argument applies to any essential utility. The public's need of protection against suspension in the coal-mining industry, for example, is as urgent as in transportation.

Whether public opinion has crystallized in favor of compulsory arbitration may be questioned, but there is no doubt that public anxiety is turning towards compulsory arbitration as the logical and inevitable next step.

Should Congress carry out the President's suggestion there could be no misunderstanding the nature of this departure. Compulsory arbitration would be a mile post in our industrial evolution. If the decisions of the Railroad Labor Board are to have the force of court opinions binding alike upon railroad employers and employes, it means that the strike as a weapon is illegalized.

The question raised by this proposal is: Shall railroad employes agree to surrender the right to quit work when every other argument and protest have failed? It is a serious question. On the other hand, there is the public welfare. Can any group insist upon a right the exercise of which is destructive, not only to industry, but to the very life of the people?

One thing is certain: Indispensable utilities like transportation and fuel must be kept operating. Their suspension means destruction. That compulsory arbitration would maintain permanent industrial peace cannot be asserted. That the present crisis urges the trial of such a plan is manifest. And if compulsory arbitration should fail in practice, then the next step would be in order—Government ownership and operation of the basic utilities. Public opinion, we are sure, in which is included the majority of union labor, would be in favor of giving compulsory arbitration a fair trial before going to the alternative extreme.

While there has been some talk of a tariff commission composed of experts, those who really appreciate the splendid loyalty of the congressional majority to the fine old traditions of the G. O. P. are sure that that majority will never do anything so outrageous as to leave the tariff to men who know something about it.

THE WATERS OF HA HA TONKA.

The announcement that the stream and lake at Ha Ha Tonka, the property of the Snyder estate, have been thrown open to the public ought to be a mobilizing order to Missouri nimrods. The lake abounds in rainbow trout, but the mountain stream, with its extraordinary difficulties and fascination, will engage the efforts of those to whom the sport, not the catch, appeals.

And the pilgrimage to the waters of Ha Ha Tonka should not be restricted to the disciples of "Father Isaak." There is a landscape, rugged, virile, majestic, that beckons to all lovers of nature. Eminent travelers have gazed upon it and in trying to record their impression have surrendered gladly to the superlative. But were there no grandeur of hills to bow to, no caves to explore, no legends to be told and learned—were there nothing there but the waters of Ha Ha Tonka, the journey were abundantly worth the making.

The source of the mountain stream is a spring at the base of a cliff that rises sheer to a height of perhaps fifty feet. From the top of the cliff the whole winding course of the stream may be followed, past glistening rocks and short clear runs that disappear in tangles, to emerge in foaming cascades and finally pouring into the basin where rests the lake. Under the bright sunlight the stream is a flow of tumbling turquoise, but the lake in the placid distance, shadowed by the sheltering hills, wears the softer tone of amethyst. Old oaks that have warred with the winds of many winters give the refinement of dignity to the glowing beauty. And farther away toward the horizon the watcher from the cliff at twilight observes the resolute pine tree standing guard—an immemorial sentinel on the lonely heights of Ha Ha Tonka.

It would certainly be embarrassing if England, suddenly acceding to our request for help in enforcing the prohibition law, should unexpectedly seize our Government ships, arrest our Government bartenders and confiscate our Government liquor.

MRS. MOSS' CANDIDACY.

If a man with the qualifications possessed by Mrs. L. W. St. Clair Moss were the Democratic nominee for Congress from the Eighth Missouri District, his election would be virtually certain. Therefore, if Mrs. Moss is defeated, which appears unlikely, it can be charged exclusively to the fact that she is a woman, and the electorate will stand convicted of a narrow prejudice which we do not believe exists there.

The interview with Mrs. Moss, appearing in last Sunday's Post-Dispatch, discloses one of the most vivid and engaging personalities that has entered Missouri politics in many years. In view of her remarkable record of achievement, doubt of her capacity is impossible. It is not sufficient to say that for 30 years she has done the work of a man—it was a work which only a big man could have carried out. Add to that the experience of wife, mother and housekeeper, and you have a rare combination.

Mrs. Moss' utterances disclose that she has been indulging in a practice which is depressingly uncommon among candidates, either before or after election; in a word, she has really been studying the problems of the country. Not only has she ideas about tariff, transportation, taxation and ship subsidy—but they are good ideas, ideas that will receive serious attention at Washington. Her candidacy, then, is not merely a sentimental appeal to send a woman to Congress; it is an appeal to elect a nominee of superior knowledge, energy and resource. It is a candidacy that by all means should succeed.

STOLEN NOMINATIONS.

The majority of the Democrats of Missouri who differ with Senator Reed on the vital question of foreign relations have been disfranchised of their vote for Senator at the November election by a combination of circumstances. Owing to the trespassing of Republicans in the Democratic primary the candidate whom the Democrats did not want was chosen. Republicans nominated both party candidates. There has been agitation among Democrats for an independent candidate in harmony with the party's platform and foreign policy, but that movement apparently has been enjoined by Attorney-General Barrett, who has given an opinion to the effect that the signatures of Democrats who voted in the primary on a petition to nominate an independent Democratic candidate for the senatorship would not be honored.

Thus the case against the primary law as it stands at present is complete. The law has been unsatisfactory for many reasons. It has cost the State huge sums of money; it has taken public officials from their duties to campaign for nomination; it has placed upon the people a burden of choice which, whether they are capable or not, they have not shouldered; and it has lent itself to boss control. These demerits and insufficiencies the people of the State have tolerated in fealty to the primary theory of pure democracy. But what is left to be said for a party nomination in which the party does not nominate; for a system which permits a rival party to enter the councils of another and name its leading candidate?

Primary elections are devised upon the presumption of the party system of government. That presumption has fallen down. What shred of party system is left when one party determines the nominations of another and when the candidate nominated may be at direct variance with the established platform of his party? The Democrats of Missouri have before them the pathetic task of writing a platform for their legally chosen nominee which must perform the impossible task of embracing two directly opposed positions or become utterly innocuous. To vote for Reed is to vote against the platform and record of the party. To vote for that platform and record—it literally cannot be done unless the hope of an independent Democratic candidate is finally realized.

To scrap the primary law is a simple enough proposition if sentiment is for scrapping, but to amend the law to meet the objections or to substitute a scheme which would prevent a return to the boss-manipulated convention—that is the question. One hope is a party convention composed of delegates elected by the members of the party in formal primary election rather than by the precinct caucus system.

Any remedy will be but an approximation of a perfect system. To secure honest nominations requires effort and patriotism from the voters. But any approximation would be preferable to a system which leaves the door open for the theft of the nominations of one party by another and results in a direct negation of the will of the majority of the party.

Lloyd George, it is said, is writing his memoirs. How he spends his spare time between regulating Europe, Ireland, British industry and the British Empire while he keeps his political opponents at bay has long been one of the world's favorite mysteries.

PROHIBITION OUT OF VAUDEVILLE.

On two great vaudeville circuits jokes on prohibition are to be barred. The managers explain that they are acting not in sympathy with the Anti-Saloon League but out of consideration for their audiences. So many performers have placed their humor on a wet-or-dry basis that the theme has ceased to afford amusement. Elaborations on human thirst have become inducers of a mortal weariness.

The placing of this vaudeville change upon a purely business basis will discourage any inclination on the part of the friends of prohibition to find that those whom the gods would reform they first make tired. It may also open a way to the renewal of the agitation against the presentation of the stage Irishman and similar histrionic caricatures. Let it be shown that any one of these burlesque characterizations has arrived at the point where it produces a yawn instead of a laugh and the doom of that particular enterprise in humor will have been sounded.

Still, there might be other good business reasons aside from that of the wearied audience for the abolition of the wet-or-dry scintillation. In districts holding stanchly by the eighteenth amendment one understands the indiscretion of founding a jest on that piece of sacred writing. In sections strong for modification or repeal, prohibition is no joke, anyway; it is a thing at which only the bootlegger may laugh.

A NEW NATIONAL ANTHEM.

Dr. Robert Watson says we need a new national anthem. He feels that neither "The Star-Spangled Banner" nor "America" fills the bill. He wants something that will comprehensively voice our hopes, devotions, aspirations and traits of national character, and that will have a tune everybody can sing. The New York World pessimistically observes that the order is too large.

We differ with the opinion. The material, it seems to us, is already at hand, and only needs arrangement. What we suggest is a medley of the airs that have found great favor with the American people, and that meet Dr. Watson's demands. Very well, our love of justice may be indicated with a strain from "Treat Me on the Level, Gal." Our traditional admiration for France, with "How You Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm After They've Seen Paree."

The learned doctor would have the projected masterpiece laud our love of peace. Then why not a plaintive bar from "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier"? One of our characteristics is a fondness for the outdoors—we love to roam the plains. Thus, a line from "Give a Man a Horse." Moreover, the American husbandman is devoted to his family, and so we may include "Sweet Mamma" and "Oh, You Beautiful Baby." There remains the Yankee shrewdness on which we pride ourselves, and we might take in, "I'm Nobody's Fool." And as for our inner yearnings, what better portrays them than that old favorite, "How Dry I Am"?

Indeed, the question is not how to obtain the proper material, but how to limit it. Even our worship of the arts may be suggested by a few notes from the opus, "Say It With Jazz." Nor need Dr. Watson or the World languish in vain for a competent composer. Irving Berlin could whip the thing into shape in a week's time, and have prepared scores for xylophone, tom-tom and cowbell.

THE KING OF JAZZPHOBIA.

A Farce in One Act.
By W. T. Fitch.

Place: Audience chamber in the Royal Palace.

DRAMATIS PERSONA.

Whiskbroom..............His Prime Minister
Longreen..
Cabot........
Elihu........ ....The Privy Council

Bankers, lawyers, bootleggers, ward bosses, gum-shoe men, jesters, magnates, war contractors, etc.

A fanfare of bugles announces the approach of King Subservius. A janitor hastily brushes a path through the cigar butts and cigarette stubs. Enter Subservius, attended by four detectives. He ascends the throne, looking behind it before seating himself, to see that no assassin lurks there. The Royal Chaplain offers prayer. A silence, broken by the King:

Subservius: My most loyal subjects, it is time somebody said something—I mean to say, has anybody got any suggestions?

Whiskbroom: Your majesty, I have several matters that I wish to call to your august attention. First, I hold in my hand a memorandum from the Powers assembled at Genoa, a request that you send them a remittance as a guarantee of good faith; also, that you order the bread wagon to call.

Subservius: This is so sudden. Tell them I'll drop them a line in a couple of years, if I don't forget it.

Subservius: Stop! What do they want?

Subservius: Hold! Enough. Send them our royal regrets, and slip in some advertising matter.

Whiskbroom (turns page and reads): The Hague sends your majesty the freedom of the country, and asks that you attend a little party they are getting up. They caution you to beware of barbed wire when crossing the frontier.

Subservius: Send 'em a stall; also, some wooden shoe ads. We've lots of lumber in the shipyards.

An uproar is heard at the entrance to the audience chamber. Enter a soldier, who confers with the Captain of the Guard.

Subservius: Petition! Always petitions. Do they think I'm Santa Claus? Admit them.

Enter group of ex-soldiers. Leader presents document to King, who passes it to Whiskbroom, who opens and reads title.

Whiskbroom: Sire, these lowbrows want a Bonus, or words to that effect.

Subservius: Speak it.

Longreen: I fear for your majesty's health if you read all those names. And besides, we, your loyal subjects, don't want strange elephants stepping on the royal pocketbook. We will attend to that.

Subservius: Your advice comes just in time. I was beginning to like the looks of those boys. Gentlemen, the janitor will show you out.

Soldier: Sire, we brought you the scalp of Bill Hoan-hollerin, which now ornaments the royal barn door. We are out of a job and need a few beans to tide us over.

Subservius: Begin at the bottom and work up, like I and these, my courtiers. Consider our example. Good day, and don't start anything.

Soldiers exit, amid laughter from the courtiers.

Whiskbroom: Sire, a goodly army of your most loyal subjects have planned another expedition against the people who have been troubling you. I refer to the large tribe who wear bits of glass, in various kinds of holders, over their eyes. The Scientist, F. Opper, has drawn very lifelike pictures of this tribe, and calls them "The Common People" from their common habit of falling for everything. Longreen suggests that the common people's pocketbooks are about ripe again.

Subservius: By all means send an army and gather their wallets. There should be a good crop by now.

Whiskbroom: Sire, the war contractors' union demands that you call off the dog. They say that just because they were friendly with Woodrow, is no reason for you to go digging up bygones on them. They offer to do as much for you when the time comes.

Subservius: The Privy Council will give their request the o. o. when they have nothing else to do.

Whiskbroom: And, your majesty, there is a bunch of kids outside who crave audience. They bear banners which insinuate that you have their fathers in the hoose gow, and will not let them go. They seem to think that, as all other nations have turned loose their political jailbirds, we should do the same. I told them that we were different; that we didn't believe in in apeing Europe. That this was the Land of the Free, and that we did as we pleased.

Subservius (looking at wrist watch): It is time for my game of golf. Send around the Rolls-Royce.

Whiskbroom: But what about the kids, your majesty?

Subservius: Set the dog on them. (Addressing his courtiers): I shot a 97 yesterday. How is that for an old bird like me, fellows?

Chorus of courtiers: Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!

Exit march by Hawaiian Quartet, "Aloha Oe," in which courtiers join.

When Voltaire was expelled from France he was amazed to discover that in England nothing was done to people who wrote criticisms of the Government. That was indeed the golden age of freedom, and some of the political prisoners in our Federal prisons must look back to it with grief and longing.

It is said that Walter Rathenau "had everything" before he went into politics and died by assassination. Of course, that is a mistake. He did not have power, without which no man can be happy, though we would have a much better world if he could.

ST. LOUIS VS. THE WEST.

OUT where the air is so much purer,
That's where the West begins.

Out where the streets are so much better,
Where nights are so cool you need a sweater,
Out where the water's a little wetter,
That's where the West begins.

Out where the days are of long duration,
Where you never need swim in your perspiration,
That's where the West begins.

Out where the rainy hours are fewer,
Where the signs you see are a trifle truer,
That's where the West begins.

But back where the girls are mighty pretty—
There is nothing like them, more's the pity!
At least, out here in Denver City—

From the New York World.

IN the agreement with Germany the United States has effected a thoroughly fair and businesslike arrangement for determining the amount of American claims against Germany. A mixed commission, in which both parties stand on an equal footing, is a tribunal from which justice and impartiality may be expected in its decisions. That the German Government requested President Harding to name the umpire to act in case of disagreement between the American and German Commissioners was an act of courtesy and good will not calculated to react to Germany's disadvantage. Senatorial critics may rail at the administration's direct methods of negotiation without waiting for the orders or approval of Congress. But the one concrete plan before Congress was Senator Underwood's, which left to Germany no voice whatever in the determination of the amount or the character of the claims for the payment of which it was to be adjudged liable. It was a one-sided affair to which no foreign Government mindful of its rights could reasonably be expected to assent. It would have imposed upon Germany a surrender to which it could submit only under necessity. The agreement entered into with Germany will leave the United States without any cause for self-reproach in the future. It has not taken undue advantage of its position, it has not assumed the power to exact more than was its due.

EFFECTIVE RUSSIAN RELIEF.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

COL. HASKELL is leaving Moscow, having fed some 9,000,000 Russians, who would have starved but for our American food, carried to them in spite of wretched and disorganized transportation, through a country two-thirds as large as the United States. There have been put in the reach of these sufferers 200,000 tons of food for adults, 120,000 tons of food for children, seed grain for the next crops and $7,000,000 worth of medical stores. That is the largest program for the relief of suffering that the world ever saw. It has been carried out successfully because of the energy and efficiency of the agents of American givers and through American tact which has been able to overcome the suspicion of Russia soviets and to secure the co-operation necessary to carry this food to the hungry. These are the very qualities needed to straighten out the tangle of European policies, which is holding back not only Europe but ourselves and the whole world from returning prosperity.

OLD ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS.

From the Baltimore News.

ABOUT a score of years ago Cecil J. Sharp, realizing that many old English folk-songs which had been current were in danger of dying out, went about the dialect-speaking parts of England and transcribed from the lips of old people the words and music of many old songs which had been in constant use in the days of their youth but were no longer sung. In [illegible] he completed a trip through the Appalachians where he found the mountaineers speaking in a vocabulary which resembled certain older English forms of speech and still singing many old folk songs which had gone out of use in England. He has now brought to an end a similar trip along the Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee border line and found that the villagers still sing exquisite old English ballads and dance the old English steps. In other respects they preserve a certain Old World charm and dignity of manner and kindliness and grace of hospitality.

MESSAGES from absent vacationists indicate that the thoughts of many are turning toward home and that another three or four weeks will find most of them returning with arrangements for schools and colleges for the juniors ready to be carried out, and with tentative plans for the gayeties attendant upon the inauguration of a new social season. The August social calm during the past week was undisturbed except for the setting of a number of fall wedding dates, evidencing that autumn, which is not so far away, will witness lively rivalry between the lure of October, the hitherto favored month for fall weddings, and September upon which several brides-to-be are setting the stamp of approval.

British Naval Attache Marries Washington Girl

PETOSKEY, Mich., Aug. 19.—Capt. Sidney R. Bailey, D. S. O. R. N., British naval attache at Washington, son of the late Sir James and Lady Bailey of Lofts Hall, Essex, England, and aid to Admiral Beattie in the World War, was married to Miss Mildred Washington Bromwell of Washington in a quiet ceremony on the lawn beside the summer residence of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Matthew Scott, in Charlevoix, last Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Bishop John N. McCormick of Grand Rapids, Mich., and aside from the immediate families the only guest was Gen. Keppel Bethel, British military attache at Washington.

The bride was attended by her cousin, Miss Elizabeth Stevenson, of Princeton, N. J., and the groom by Harold Sims of the British Embassy. The bride wore white satin, a tulle veil, and a pearl necklace, the last named being the gift of her mother, and carried lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid's costume was of mauve chiffon and included a large picture hat. She carried pink rosebuds. Capt. Bailey was in full uniform.

The bridal pair will sail from New York next Wednesday for Rio de Janeiro, where Capt. Bailey has been ordered to represent the British Government at the Centennial Exposition. They will return to Washington about Oct. 31, to be present at a large reception and ball in their honor, and will sail for England in late November.

BOSTON, Aug. 19.—After the excitement of last week, the greatest yachting week the North Shore has ever seen, this past few days have appeared comparatively quiet, the colonists resting from the round of gayeties. In the races held at Marblehead last week 1306 yachts crossed the starting line in the seven days devoted to the sport.

On Sunday, however, the Annisquam Yacht Club held its regular weekly contests. The closest of the races was that of the Bird Class which was finally won by Jack Gordon of St. Louis, with his "Albatross," crossing the finish line a half minute ahead of the following boat.

H. L. Challfoux of Beverly Cove was this year's winner of the Inglelowe trophy, offered by George A. Dobyne of St. Louis for a golf tournament at the Essex County Club, Manchester. The prize is a replica of the original silver trophy, which remains the perpetual property of the club, but the name of the winner each year is engraved upon the original.

Mrs. William H. Scudder of St. Louis is entertaining Mrs. Florence Hayward of St. Louis at her summer home at Magnolia. Mrs. Scudder, Mrs. Hayward, Mrs. Luther Ely Smith, Mrs. John Overall and Mrs. Henry McRee were a party which motored to Portsmouth for the Hindu Play, given at the Portsmouth theater for the benefit of devastated France. The party went over to Rye Beach in the morning, lunching with friends at the Farragut, before the performance at Portsmouth.

Mrs. Eugene A. Perry and family of New York are to leave Stonehurst, Magnolia, early in September, to meet Mrs. Perry's mother, Mrs. Claude Kilpatrick, who has been traveling abroad with her granddaughter, Miss Elizabeth Scudder, and who is expected to arrive the first week in September in New York. Mrs. Kilpatrick will not come to Magnolia this season, much to the regret of her many friends along the North Shore.

A party of riders attended a picnic on Friday under the leadership of their instructor on the shores of Chebacco Lake. A basket lunch was taken and the entire trip made by horseback. In the party was Miss Ruth Kreismann and Miss Helma Kreismann, who are with their mother, Mrs. F. H. Kreismann of St. Louis, at the Oceanside, Magnolia.

W. C. Steigers of St. Louis, a season guest at the New Ocean House, Swampscott, was the winner of the weekly putting contest on the Ocean House grounds on Saturday.

PRONUNCIATIONS

Optometry is the science and art of measuring the optical state of the eye; of revealing the structural defects causing abnormal vision; of correcting visual faults by remedial lenses, or by other methods without resorting to drugs or surgery.

An Optometrist is required by the laws of Missouri to pass an examination in Optometry. If successful, a license to practice is issued, which must be displayed in a conspicuous place.

Every practicing Optometrist within the state is therefore licensed, and, upon qualification, is entitled to use the Emblem shown below. It is to the Optometrists who possess this Emblem that the public should turn for relief and counsel in all cases of defective vision.

SIMPLE APPLICATION THAT DISSOLVES BLACKHEADS

No more squeezing and pinching to get rid of those unsightly blemishes, blackheads. There is one simple, safe and sure way to get them out and that is to dissolve them. To do this just get about two ounces of calonite powder from your druggist—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet sponge—rub briskly over the blackheads for a few seconds—wash the parts and every blackhead will be gone.

Pinching and squeezing out blackheads make large pores and you cannot get all of the blackheads out this way—while this simple application of calonite powder and water dissolves every particle of them and leaves the skin and pores in their natural condition. Any druggist will sell you the calonite powder and about two ounces will be all you will ever need.

Summer-Spoiled Skin Removed by Absorption

As undue summer exposure usually leaves an undesirable surface of tan, redness or roughness, often freckles too, the sensible thing to do is to remove such surface. There's nothing better for this than ordinary mercolized wax, which actually absorbs an unwholesome complexion. The thin layer of surface skin is itself absorbed, gently, gradually, so there's no inconvenience, no detention indoors. Spread the wax lightly over the entire face at bedtime and take it off in the morning with warm water. If you will get one ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store, use it for a week or so, you may expect marked improvement daily. When the underlying skin is wholly in view your complexion will be a marvel of spotless purity and beautiful whiteness.

mer colony at Eastern Point, New London, where Mr. and Mrs. Edward Nugent and family have a home.

Edward Nugent has returned to Eastern Point, New London, from a two weeks' trip to St. Louis.

Mrs. Clara McClung and family of St. Louis are spending the summer at their camp on Mason's Island, Mystic, Conn.

News of Missourians in Washington Society.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON. Aug. 19.—One of the by-products of the strike situation is the disappointment of the 1000 children of the city of Mooseheart, Ill., who have been awaiting the visit of President and Mrs. Harding, which was scheduled for Aug. 24, for several months.

Strike affairs have also altered the plans of Mrs. James M. Thomson, daughter of the late Champ Clark, who went directly home to New Orleans via Chicago instead of returning to Washington, where a number of entertainments had been planned in her honor. She will return to Washington later in the fall, it is said, and probably will be accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Champ Clark, who is spending the summer quietly at Honeyshuck, the Clarks' country place at Bowling Green, Mo.

John B. Henderson, who has been keeping bachelor hall at Boundary Castle, has joined his mother and his daughter, Miss Beatrice Henderson, at Bar Harbor. They will return to Washington about the middle of September.

One of the prettiest weddings of the season took place in St. John's Church Thursday when Miss Thelma Christine Crowe, daughter of Louis H. Crowe of Isle of Man, England, was married to James William Waller who formerly lived in St. Louis.

The bride wore a gown of white georgette and lace with paneled back with a train of Venetian lace and a veil of net, made in the crown effect. The two bridesmaids were Miss Vera Allen of St. Louis and Miss Kathleen Jones of Danforth, Va. They wore frocks of orchid colored organdie with silver girdles and picture hats of the same material and carried Russell roses. Among the ushers was Harry Sargeant of St. Louis. The young couple will reside in Washington after their honeymoon is over.

Mrs. James A. Reed, wife of the Senator, will return to Missouri about Sept. 1 and will visit in Kansas City for some time. Representative Harry Hawes and the Misses Hawes were among those who returned to Washington last week. Representative and Mrs. Millspaugh and Miss Nelle Millspaugh have remained here and will not go away this autumn. Representative and Mrs. Edgar Ellis have also returned

All the More Interesting Because of Low Prices

Poiret twill and tricotine of beautiful texture lend themselves to the fine tucks, self bindings and cleverly accurate finish that give these models distinction.

The long, straight coats are lined with Canton crepe. The skirts, longer than last year's, are very smartly cut.

POLITICAL ISSUES IN CAMPAIGNS IN EASTERN STATES

HEARST CAMPAIGN STRONGLY OPPOSED

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—The Republican contest in Massachusetts to wrest from Henry Cabot Lodge a renomination for the United States Senate shares with the rivalry within the Democratic party of New York State in the choice of a candidate for Governor the chief interest in congressional and State campaigns in Eastern States.

Advocacy of both strict and modified prohibition enforcement, the tariff, soldiers' compensation, labor legislation and various State governmental reforms, are among the issues.

Summary of Issues.

MASSACHUSETTS—Joseph Walker, former Speaker of the Massachusetts House, is seeking the seat of Senator Lodge on the ground that his leadership is not progressive enough to represent the party. Walker champions American membership in the League of Nations. Russell A. Wood of Cambridge and Washington Cook of Sharon, also may enter the lists. William A. Gaston, banker; Sherman L. Whipple, attorney; John Jackson Walsh, a former State Senator, and Prof. Dallas Lore Sharp of Boston University, are campaigning for the Democratic nomination for Senator. Prof. Sharp is for abolition of war. The renomination of Gov. Channing H. Cox for a second term is opposed on the Republican side by Attorney-General J. Westen Allen.

New York candidates for Governor and United States Senator will not be known until the party conventions, Sept. 28-29. Gov. Nathan L. Miller Republican, seems sure of renomination if he will accept. Little organized opposition has developed to the renominatoin of United States Senator William M. Calder. Admirers of William Randolph Hearst are waging an energetic campaign to give the newspaper publisher the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. While the strength of the Hearst boom has not been determined, violent objection has been registered to it by many up-State Democratic leaders, who are urging the candidacy of former Gov. Alfred E. Smith. Such prominent Democrats as former Assistant Secretary of the Navy Franklin D. Roosevelt are understood to believe that Hearst's hostility to President Wilson would militate against him as a candidate and that his nomination would disrupt the party. Democarts will ask for the return to the direct primary system, for modification of the prohibition enforcement statutes, repeal of the motion pictures censorship and for the establishment of a minimum wage commission.

Both Candidates Dry.

PENNSYLVANIA — Gifford Pinchot, Republican, and John A. McSparran, Democratic, candidates for Governor in Pennsylvania, both favor the rigid enforcement of the prohibition law. Efforts may be made in the coming campaign to elect legislators who favor a more drastic enforcement law.

DELAWARE—No outstanding issues have appeared for the coming State campaign. The contest for United States Senator, it is expected, will be along national lines.

NEW JERSEY — United States Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, seeking the Republican renomination, and opposed by George L. Record of Jersey City, holds that the people want prohibition. He supports a protective tariff. Record makes

AMERICAN LEGION CONSIDERING ESTABLISHING A GRETNA GREEN

By the Associated Press.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 19.—National conventions and honeymoons are seldom taken together, but the American Legion National Convention Committee is face to face with the problem of creating a Gretna Green for a number of legion men who will attend the national gathering here Oct. 16-20.

Committee members thought they had worries enough in arranging for the entertainment of the 150,000 visitors expected, when in comes a letter from Comrade Oscar Mickelson of Brockett, N. D., asking for information in regard to provisions being made for the performance of marriage ceremonies during the convention.

During the legion convention in Kansas City last year 20 couples were married in convention hall by the Rev. John W. Inzer, national chaplain. The Kansas City committee paid for the marriage licenses and local merchants provided wedding rings and numerous presents.

It is probable that a committee on marriage will be added to the convention list.

monopoly-curbing the chief issue, declining to discuss prohibition. Gov. Edwards apparently will have no opposition for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator. Judge George S. Silzer, Democratic candidate for the gubernatorial nomination, has done no campaigning. His opponent, William E. Tuttle, State Banking and Insurance Commissioner, advocates modification of the Volstead law.

MAINE—William R. Pattangall, former State's Attorney-General, is the Democratic candidate for Governor. Gov. Percival P. Baxter is Republican candidate. United States Senator Frederick Hale, Republican candidate for re-election, is opposed by former Gov. Oakley C. Curtis of Portland, Democratic. The election will be held Sept. 11.

Farmer Runs for Governor.

VERMONT—State Senator Redfield Proctor is candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. His opponent for nomination is a farmer, Abram Foote. Congressman Frank L. Green is the only announced Republican candidate to succeed United States Senator Carroll S. Page, who is to retire.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—There is no senatorial contest. Candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination include Maj. Fred H. Brown of Somersworth, John C. Hutchins of Stratford and Albert W. Noone of Petersborough. Arthur G. Whittemore of Dover and Windsor H. Goodnow of Keen seek the Republican nomination.

RHODE ISLAND—Prohibition enforcement and differences growing out of the long textile strike are expected to figure in the campaign. Former Gov. R. Livingston Beeckman is expected to be the Republican candidate for the United States Senate in opposition to Senator Peter Goelet Gerry (Democratic).

Democrats Want Beer.

CONNECTICUT—The Republicans will make the tariff the dominant issue. United States Senator McLean will be renominated and his tariff stand indorsed. The Democrats will demand an amendment permitting beer and wines; urge more liberal treatment of war veterans and oppose the Republicans on the tariff.

WEST VIRGINIA—Howard Sutherland of Elkins, United States Senator, was renominated by the Republicans at the primary, Aug. 1. The Democrats nominated for Senator M. M. Neely of Fairmont, though his opponent, Mrs. Izetta Jewell Brown of Kingwood, widow of Congressman William C. Brown, showed strength in some counties. Miss Hattie Stein, a former Red Cross worker, was defeated for the Republican congressional nomination in the Sixth District by L. S. Echols of Charleston, incumbent.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The Grand Duke Cyril, who considers himself the heir to the Russian throne, and the liberator of Russia, is about to launch a proclamation to the Russian people and army making known his intention to restore order and the proper process of law in Russia without exercising measures of repression or of revenge against the bolshevists and the supporters of their regime.

Grand Duke Cyril announces his purpose in an interview in the Figaro. He has the mystic idea that he was saved "miraculously" from the Petropavlosk, when that battleship was torpedoed at the beginning of the Russo-Japanese war and almost every soul on board was lost, only because Providence intended he should one day shape the destinies of the Russian nation.

IMMEDIATE ACTION URGED FOR 4 STATE WAR HOSPITALS

Expenditure of $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa Recommended.

COL. M'BRIDE WRITES TO COL. SPRAGUE

Proposal Expected to Relieve Shortage of Facilities for Caring for World War Disabled.

Immediate expenditure of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa for increased hospital facilities for veterans of the World War is recommended in a letter sent yesterday by Col. Harry D. McBride, of St. Louis, chairman of the American Legion Rehabilitation Committee for District No. 9, which embraces those States, to Col. A. A. Sprague of Chicago, chairman of the National Rehabilitation Committee of the Legion.

The letter recomends that the general medical and surgical hospital now under construtcion at Jefferson Barracks be enlarged so as to accommodate 500 beds instead of the 250 beds it is planned for and the abandonment of Hospital No. 35, at 5800 Arsenal street, formerly the City Infirmy, now under lease to the Government.

Conversion of Fort Des Moines, near Des Moines, Ia., from a military post into a neuro-psychiatric hospital at a cost of approximately $500,000; establishment of two 500-bed tubercular hospitals, one near Kansas City, Mo., and the other in Eastern Nebraska, and a continuation of Hospital No. 67, now located at Kansas City, Mo., are also recommended in the letter.

These recommendations are expected to be submitted for approval at the State convention of the American Legion at Hannibal tomorrow or Tuesday, McBride said.

McBride's Plans.

"The recommendations have been gone over in a general way by Col. Sprague and have his approval," McBride added. "We are confident that they will be forwarded by the National Committee to the proper Government agency. We shall then wait a reasonable length of time for the Government to take action.

"If we find the Government looks upon the recommendations with disfavor, or that there is undue delay through political activities or other machinations, we shall go before the public in the four States, confident that we can create a sentiment in favor of these recommendations which will compel favorable governmental action."

In reciting present hospitalization conditions in the district the letter quotes records of the Veterans' Bureau to the effect that there are only 1348 beds available in the district for care of disabled veterans. Of that number, 345 are in Government-owned buildings, the others being in leased quarters.

The letter estimates that there are 7000 ex-service men in the district suffering mental and nervous diseases, only 492 of whom are receiving treatment at present. It estimates that there are 6000 tubercular ex-service men of whom only 191 are now hospitalized and urges facilities for 750 general hospital and surgical patients.

What It Was.

Of the present hospital at 5800 Arsenal street, St. Louis, the letter says:

This was formerly an almshouse or old people'e home now leased by the Government. It is not adapted in any way as a modern hospital. It is composed of separate four-story buildings and outside stairways. Meals are prepared in a detached building, which necessitates food being carried out of doors. Certain wards are located in semibasements with granitoid floors. No elevators are provided. The buildings are old, dilapidated and not entirely fireproof. This hospital is utilized for all types of cases, including neuro-psychiatric, tubercular, general hospital and surgical. The building in which approximately 20 insane patients are confined formerly was a warehouse. Owing to the lack of facilities, when a patient becomes violent, he must be physically restrained within the presence and view of all other insane patients."

SUIT FOR LIEN AGAINST ESTATE

W. W. Henderson, an attorney, filed suit yesterday for a lien against the estate of Henry Gross, banker and railroad man, who died in July, 1921. Henderson alleges that $28,320 is due him for professional services he rendered in obtaining the nullification of the last will of Henry Gross and having an earlier will made legal for his clients, Kate and Charles L. Gross. Henderson's petition states that John B. Gross, executor of the estate, is about to settle the will, and he asks for an injunction.

The will of Henry Gross, which left but little to Kate and Charles L. Gross, was rejected, and an earlier will was held to be legal. Henderson says he was to have been paid 40 per cent of the total amount given to his clients.

ited on the horrors, perils, temptations, evils and poor earnings of newspaper folk, and at the dilapidated plant of the newspaper took care that the seamy side of each new sight was not slighted.

But young Harmsworth was entranced. "Why, this is ripping!" he glowed. "I should just like to work here."

The next moment he was interviewing a "devil" and the next a pressman, for every bit of information he could get of their work in the big organization. Before he left the place he had become infected with the subtle, compelling atmosphere of the game, and from that day forth determined to become writer, editor and publisher.

Jotted Down Good Ideas for Articles.

An American reporter who visited Harmsworth, then a "rising young editor," in 1888, wrote: "Sometimes, during our conversation, I dropped a remark that attracted his attention to a marked degree. 'That's a good idea for an article,' he would observe, as he made notes on a pad; or, 'That's something we ought to adopt over here.' "

Wasn't Sure, But Thought He Would Choose Lords.

A few days later, after Harmsworth had argued with the American for the advisability of starting his publication, Answers, which sprang into popularity overnight, and they together had written a book called "A Thousand Ways to Make a Living," passing the House of Parliament, the American remarked that the Commons was in session. "I expect to be in there some day," the future Lord Northcliffe said, thoughtfully. "I haven't quite made up my mind whether it will be the Commons or the Lords. I rather think I shall go into the House of Lords, because there would be more scope there."

Would Never Make Yellow Journal of The Times.

Passing the Times Building one day, Harmsworth observed: "Isn't it a funnny-looking old building for a newspaper? That is one of our great British institutions, and the building is typical of John Bull's conservatism. I shall probably own a newspaper some day, and may even get the Times, but if I do I shall never transform it into a yellow journal. That would be sacrilege, and the British public wouldn't stand it."

It will be remembered that when he did get the Times the conservative element, until Northcliffe set it at ease, stood aghast at the prospect of the debauching of that staid journal by the "too-near-yellow" editor who had introduced American methods in the Daily Mail.

Guessing Contest Won a Fortune.

A year after Harmsworth, at 23, had started Answers, its circulation was only 48,000, and every scheme to increase it showed negligible results. Then England awoke one morning to find every wall and fence plastered with posters announcing "A Pound a Week for Life!" to the one who wrote on a coupon clipped from Answers and attested by four friends the nearest guess as to the amount of money in the Bank of England on a certain date. The circulation jumped to 718,000 and fortune was won.

Secret of Success to Use Assistants.

Three years later the American called again on Harmsworth in the offices of Answers. It was on edition time, and the birth-throes of a newspaper edition generally can be felt for blocks, but he was perfectly cool and smiling. When the visitor remarked to that effect, Harmsworth replied: "The reason is that I direct everything and leave the carrying out to others. The secret of success, I have already discovered, is to originate, direct and scrutinize, but to do nothing which can be done just as well by assistants."

Had Paper Issued Daily for Own Examination.

When Alfred Harmsworth in 1896, then publisher of the Evening News, decided to start the Daily Mail in the morning field, still in England, the most powerful, he invested $2,500,000 in the enterprise and then, to test his material and machinery and gather the ablest possible staff, he had the paper issued daily for three months without circulating a single copy, for his examination.

Methods Astounding to Old Style Staff.

The Harmsworth methods of journalism, were, as well as revelational to the public, most astounding to the old-style English staff. Previous to his advent intercourse between editor and reporter was carried on chiefly by letter, and in some cases if a reporter did not receive an assignment by the first mail he was not expected to go to the office that day.

The Young Writer Had Expected Something Else.

A young writer who was sent to investigate a series of happenings in a Midland town for one of the Northcliffe papers was badly hoaxed and brought a stinging amount of ridicule upon the paper. This is the deadly sin, and the young man, despondent, was dismayed when, leaving the office for lunch, he encountered the automobile of Northcliffe, the last man he wanted to see, drawing up at the door. "What's this I hear?" exclaimed the publisher. "You have had your leg pulled, haven't you? Don't take it too much to heart. We all get deceived sometimes. I've had my leg pulled before now. It's annoying, but don't worry about it."

Still a Reporter Though Head of 60 Papers.

Northcliffe, at the head of 60 publications distributed by an army of dealers estimated at 50,000, remained still the reporter. During an Irish uprising in 1914 he went himself "to the scene," during the war he spent considerable time at the front, and he frequently picked up important news about London and immediately telephoned it to one of his papers.

Got Two Great Beats Himself.

In the early days of the Daily Mail he added greatly to its reputation by two great beats he obtained himself. One was with Cecil Rhodes, a fellow "Colussus," as director of the British fortunes in South Africa, who previously had adamantly refused to talk. Later on, when the Conservative Government began to totter, he scored another sensational scoop of the world through obtaining from Arthur James Balfour, then Prime Minister, the first news of his resignation, the downfall of the Conservative Government, and the plans for a general election.

Had to Sleep on Premises.

Northcliffe, asked to define his idea of newspaper control, told Marcosson: "I agree with the elder Bennett, who said that no man can control a newspaper unless he sleeps on the premises. That is why I keep a bed at the Times."

Carson relates that an American interviewer asked him whether he had considered starting a paper in this country, and was told: "My answer has been invariably that no man living can manage a paper by cable. For a foreigner to compete from a distance with your live and vigorous press would be an act of brief and expensive foolishness."

Carried Associates to Fortune.

Northcliffe, on his rocket-like ascent into the British editorial, political and financial skies, carried a number of associates to fortune. His brother, Harold, who was associated with him from the start, is Lord Rothermere, reputed wealthiest of the Harmsworths, and private owner of several provincial journals; Cecil and Leicester, two other brothers, have derived large incomes from interests in the Harmsworth publications; Kennedy Jones, the $25-a-week reporter, who, on nothing but nerve, secured an option on the Evening News and sold it to Northcliffe as his first big newspaper, and was immediately made its managing editor, has retired a millionaire, and many other wealthy men owe their fortune to connection with Northcliffe, for which connection, however, the first and only essential was ability.

Known to Older Men as Alfred.

To the older of his men Northcliffe was known always as Alfred, and his ironical sense of humor prompted him sometimes to give them affectionate little jabs to keep them up to the mark. For example, some of his chiefs who were easing up a bit received a glaring lithograph of a swarming beehive. His oldest special writer on the Daily Mail once showed a handsome fountain pen to an associate, remarking, "Here's a nice gift from Alfred. Evidently he wants me to do some writing."

"Well, have you done any?"

"Indeed I have. I've just made out two nice, fat expense accounts with my nice, fat gold-mounted pen."

Woman's Interview With Premier.

Just before the opening session of the Supreme War Council at Versailles Lloyd George, Balfour, Lord Milner and Earl Reading held a preliminary conference at the Hotel de Crillon. As Northcliffe entered the hotel a little and discouraged woman reporter stopped him and asked him to help her get an interview with the Prime Minister—an improbable achievement. Northcliffe returned to her and said, "I interrupted them, but apologized and explained matters." He had arranged an interview that flashed over the world to the credit of the woman reporter.

Expected Some to Be Sorry.

When the German destroyers attacked the coast of Kent in the summer of 1917, it was easy for them to aim at Elmwood, the publisher's country home, which is in line with a lighthouse near "Ye North Cliffe" on the English Channel, from which Harmsworth took his title. A shell passed through the house and partly destroyed the library. Northcliffe immediately telegraphed the Times staff that "they would hear with mixed feelings that he was not hurt."

Happy With Enemies.

Maj. Eric Fisher Wood, writing some years ago in the Century Magazine, told of the reading to Northcliffe, following a resume of the news, of a violent attack by a rival newspaper. "Before begininng the attack," he wrote, "the secretary grinned cheerfully and expectantly, while Lord Northcliffe lay at full length upon the couch with his head turned in attentive interest, smiling a smile of happy contentment as would have shamed the famous Cheshire cat. It was not difficult to see that he is a man who would be wretchedly unhappy without a plentiful supply of enemies, and that he values their attacks more highly than the plaudits of his friends."

Sentence Spoke for Itself.

When Northcliffe came to America as the head of the British War Mission, one of the New York papers, attempting to comply with censorship rules, naively announced that "Lord Northcliffe arrived at an American port yesterday and went at once to the Hotel Gotham." When a reporter asked him what he thought of the throttle-hold on the press, he answered dryly: "I cannot discuss the subject, but that sentence, I think, speaks for itself."

Interest in Things American.

Northcliffe took great interest in things American and was an enthusiastic baseball fan. He sat in the press box in 1917 during the world series in New York between the Giants and the White Sox. When the same teams visited London in their tour of the world several years ago, it was partly the large amount of space devoted to the game and the teams by the Northcliffe papers that drew out an attendance at one of the games of 25,000, including the King and his suite.

Northcliffe's knowledge of American history also frequently surprised his interviewers in this country. Once when he was traveling from Washington to New York with some reporters, one of them mentioned Robert Fulton and added that a monument should be erected at his birthplace. Northcliffe took obvious satisfaction in interjecting: "Yes, I know—Robert Fulton was born about 10 miles from where the train now is, in Lancaster County, Pa."

Escaping From the Gunmen.

When Northcliffe visited Atlantic City in 1917 he met a Philadelphia editor he knew and two of his staff on the board walk. At the time the East was watching a political reign of terror in the editor's city. "This is surprising," exclaimed Northcliffe. "Is the whole staff down here? I suppose they sent you to Atlantic City to escape from the gunmen."

EDISON TALKS OF FACTORS IN THE NEXT WAR

Already the menace of the submarine and the airplane has practically abolished the overwater vessel."

This opinion, from the lips of the world's first inventor, is of special interest in view of a conversation which the writer recently had with one of the leaders of Wall street, who helped Pierpont Morgan steer America through her banking crisis some years ago, and who has one of the closest acquaintanceships with diplomacy and diplomats, having himself represented the United States upon certain international commissions. This man, who, during the Washington Disarmament Conference, had in his rooms several of the English, French and other national representatives, told me that the one thing which stood out in his mind amongst all the conversations and discussions was that scarcely a word was said about the two P's—"the plane and the poison gas."

Similar Opinion.

"It is easy," he said, "to agree to scrap overwater ships, which are not worth the water they rest on. The next war will be fought only with the plane and poison gas."

It is at any rate of vital interest to know that this is exactly the view today in Europe. Not a man who is behind the scenes but believes that the agreement to scrap the overwater ships is not worth the paper on which it is written. Every European diplomat knows in his heart of hearts that the next war will be a chemical war, decided only by poison gas and the airplane.

In connection with the fact that it has sometimes been alleged that in the great war, Thomas Alva Edison's inventions proved a failure, I am in a position to state, after conversation with one of the chief men in the United States Government service during the war as an expert upon war inventions, that to Edison alone was due, amongst other things, the invention of two of the most effective counters to the German submarine in the struggle. One was an extraordinary masthead light which, as it were, was placed between two plates so as to be visible only to the ship astern, and not to the deadly submarine waiting below; the other, a "submarine finder," which, employed at the level of the water, was a phenomenal dectector.

Terrible Possibilities.

It was at this point that Edison made what will yet prove to be the most historic and terrible statements that has ever been uttered by the lips of a human being. It having come to my knowledge that in the latest experiments upon a development of Lewisite, the world's most deadly poison gas, both the Germans and the Japanese had made extraordinary progress, I asked Edison the following series of questions:

1. Had he or any other inventor discovered any effective counter to the airplane?

2. Was it a fact that from 25 to 50 modern planes loaded with the new poison gas would be able without effective interference to fly over London or New York?

3. Whether, if this were possible, the dropping of the new gas could kill by suffocation some millions of people without gas masks or other preventives being abloe to stop it?

Edison, in his matter of fact way, which always carries conviction, answered these questions seriatim, but with a kind of deadly certainty which left no room for doubt.

"Neither I nor anybody else so far as I know has discovered any counter to the airplane, even in its present stage. There is nothing to prevent a flotilla of planes flying tomorrow over London and spraying New York's millions with a gas which can suffocate those millions within a comparatively short time. Twenty to 50 planes should be quite sufficient for such work."

"I have been told that practically every man, woman and child in London, for example, could be suffocated to death by such a gas within 12 hours. Is that possible? Is it true?"

Edison smiled quietly. "It is not true," he said. "It could be done in the space of three hours!"

If this be true, and Edison's obvious belief that no effective counter to "the flying death"—that is, to the airplane, was likely to be discovered in our day, it means that the next war will no longer be the affair of millions locked in a death struggle over a period of years, but just an affair of 24 hours, in which time those millions will have ceased to exist. It is to this that modern war is coming. In a word, it may quite conceivably mean that the white civilization which it has taken the centuries to build, will be poisoned in a night. No other conclusion is possible.

If the Edison Phonograph Could Think

By Mark Silverstone

THOUGH the EDISON PHONOGRAPH speaks and sings, we know that it merely repeats the words or music as originally spoken or played.

What would the EDISON say if it could think and express its thoughts in words?

It would say:

"I am proud to be an offspring of the mind of the greatest genius of this age, THOMAS A. EDISON. He evolved me. It was he who enabled me to attain perfection. When an infant, I was considered a scientific curiosity. People traveled from afar to gaze upon me—to marvel at my prattling. My voice was thin and metallic, a mere shadow of the original. Musicians spoke of my product as 'canned music.' Still the world was pleased.

"But my creator was not satisfied. He said: 'My child must grow and develop to that perfection where it can repeat the original unchanged.'

"Many years of labor, many sleepless nights, many disappointments, until the original sang and I could perfectly repeat the song. Then we sang together—no one could tell the difference—my creator said: 'Go forth into every household—YOU ARE MY MASTERPIECE.'

"I am now REAL MUSIC—I am your servant to command. I am king of musical instruments. I bring to your fireside the 'artists' encore—through me the music of the immortals speaks. The soul of the Stradivarius or Guernarius is yours to command.

"Still I exist for you alone. When you command me, you command the greatest artists. I mirror their voices, their playing, their technique, their quality.

"MY PROOF!
"Place me with them. Compare! Try to tell the difference.

"I serve the child in a dual capacity. I instruct and entertain him. I develop his appreciation for music. He never marvels at me. But the father of the child still wonders at my perfection.

"I BELONG IN EVERY HOME."

STATION K S D HEARD ON ATLANTIC OCEAN

Four New States, Making 37 in All, Added to Circle of Listeners.

With August drawing to a close, Post-Dispatch radio broadcasting station K S D is still making new record for summer transmission, the most difficult of all the year. Reports now have been received from thirty-seven States of the Union, from a steamer on the Atlantic, from most of the provinces of Canada, from ships in the Gulf, and in the republic of Mexico itself.

New states added since the last radio map was printed are Connecticut, Montana, Wyoming, and New Mexico.

Three of these letters are of unusual interest. From Chugwater, Wyo., came this card:

"We are on our way to Yellowstone Park and have a radio set with us. We heard your concert last night very plain. Threw a line over a cross arm and pulled up a hundred feet of wire for an antenna, then used an iron pump for a ground. Some transmission!" for a card was signed by L. C. Wildermann 1929 N. Kingshighway, St. Louis, Mo.

From Sidney, Mont., a former Missourian sends this letter:

"I should judge that you are about 1200 miles from my receivers but will say that your station came in last evening better than any station has ever come before, and we get them from Vancouver on the Pacific Coast to Atlanta, Ga., on the East. The writer was born and grew up in Warren County, Missouri, and the program last evening brought back fond memories of boyhood days. More success to you."

The writer is Noel Carrico, of the Gen City Electric Supply Co., Sidney, Mont.

And now we hop far south to a ranch in Union County, New Mexico, the nearest postoffice being the town of Folsom. George A. Fowler Jr., writes as follows:

"I caught the latter part of your program this evening and heard you sign off at 9:12 p. m., your time. It came in very clear and loud, using one stage of amplification on a single circuit regenerative set. Air line distance about 720 miles. You come in far better than Denver or Kansas City. You must have some outfit. Congratulations."

New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg and other large cities of the East were heard from some time ago, but it was not until this week that reports were received from Washington, D. C. Then came two letters in one mail saying K S D had been picked up nicely in the national capital. The reason why amateurs in Washington rarely hear outside radio is the nearness of several very powerful Government stations.

From S. S. Bellemina, Off Norfolk, Va.

Listened to the last three selections of your concert this evening. Very good and enjoyed by officers and crew. Signals very strong, modulation very good, selections of the best, atmospherics moderate. We are situated 35 miles from the City of Norfolk, Va.

By G. BRADBURY.
Radio Engineer, General Electric Co.

When receiving very weak radio signals from distant stations it is found that amplification of the audible tones as heard in the telephone receivers is of little or no benefit, since the strength of tube noises, static, or other interference is increased in greater proportion than the signal strength. Under these conditions the most satisfactory signals will often be obtained directly in the output from the detector without additional amplification, since the signal, although weaker, is much more distinct in the telephones than when amplified.

To secure a louder signal with good quality, or to receive more distant stations, some other means of amplification must therefore be adopted. This other means is the amplification of the signal frequency as it is received on the antenna, before it reaches the detector. Detector efficiency decreases with a decrease in the energy received, so taht if we can increase this energy before it reaches the detector, better efficiency will result.

One of the most common methods of obtaining radio frequency amplification is the utilization of regeneration in the detector tube itself. Since perfect rectification does not take place in the detector, a certain amount of radio frequency flows in its plate circuit, so that by coupling this circuit back to the grid or input of the tube, the amplified signal frequency is made to re-energize the grid and cause a still greater change in the variations of the plate current.

Regeneration may be accomplished by means of capacitive or inductive back coupling, or a combination of both. Short wave receivers are often constructed with a variable inductance in the plate circuit which can be tuned to the signal frequency. Sufficient voltage is thus built up across the plate circuit to feed a small amount of energy back to the grid through the capacity between the grid and plate within the tube itself. For long wave lengths the tube capacity becomes insufficient for good regeneration, and some additional means must be provided, such as inductive coupling between the grid and plate circuits. This consists of placing a coil of wire in the plate circuit and coupling it back to the input or grid circuit of the tube.

Another method of obtaining radio frequency amplification is to use one or more vacuum tubes ahead of the detector tube with suitable coupling between them to transfer the energy from one tube to the next at the signal frequency. As the audio frequency, the coupling between tubes may be resistances, inductances or transformers, but they cannot, of course, have the same values as for audio frequency coupling. Just as it is somewhat of a problem to build a transformer which will transfer signal voltages uniformly over a wide range of audio tones, so is it difficult to build transformers which will operate well over a broad range of radio frequencies. Since there is such a great difference in the frequencies of the various wave lengths in use, it is necessary to change transformers to receive all of the different classes of communication.

At short wave lengths amplification is accompanied by more or less regeneration through the grid and plate capacities of the tubes, as mentioned in connection with detector regeneration. For some wave lengths the back coupling is sufficient to cause oscillations in the amplifier tubes, and to overcome this tendency some special means must be provided, such as an adjustable grid voltage, which can be made positive and thus secure stable operation.

Resistance coupling has the disadvantage of letting through tube noises and other audible frequencies, so that it is sometimes difficult to use it with advantage in addition to the regular audio stages following the detector. It has, however, the advantage of being effective over a wide range of frequencies and will therefore give uniform amplification over a broader wave length band than inductive coupling.

Inductive or transformer coupling, as previously mentioned, will transfer energy at a limited range of frequencies. For this reason, inductances and transformers made for use in the amplification of the high frequencies of short wave lengths will not transfer tube noises or disturbances which are limited to audible frequencies. Several stages may thus be connected in cascade to amplify the signal without distortion before it reaches the detector. Audio amplification may then be added as desired to obtain whatever volume of sound is found necessary.

Three or four stages of radio frequency amplification make it possible to use a loop antenna with good results. For receiving broadcast signals a loop made by winding 10 turns of wire, spaced three-eights of an inch apart on a frame three feet square, is about the right size to use. There are now transformers on the market which will give good signals in conjunction with a loop and the construction of such a set will produce very gratifying results.

'THE OUTLOOK' AN IDEAL RECREATION RESORT

The Outlook, a summer resort, approximately seven miles south of St. Clair, Mo., and 67 miles from St. Louis by motor, is the eighteenth of a series of automobile tours offered motorists each Sunday by the Post-Dispatch and the Touring Bureau of the Automobile Club of Missouri.

The Outlook, which offers the motorist a variety of outdoor sports, is annually the haunt of the fisherman and the lovers of outdoor life, who enjoy the recreation obtained by swimming, boating, tennis and hiking among the beautiful hills surrounding the resort.

The view from the road along this jaunt is one of the most picturesque to be found anywhere in Missouri.

The route, which leads over the Clayton road for 21 miles and then turns off onto the Clarkson road to the Manchester road, which is then followed as described in the log below, is over fairly good roads the majority of the distance.

SCHWAB TAKES OVER STUTZ AND CUTS PRICE

That Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., and his associates, have taken active control of the Stutz Motor Car Co. of America, Inc., and will operate that plant as a separate industrial unit, retaining as executives all the men now included in the personnel, was confirmed formally by Mr. Schwab, himself, when he met with the department heads of the Stutz factory last week.

The identification of Mr. Schwab with the affairs of the Stutz company predicates a program of marked expansion and development of that property, the first step of which was the announcement of a substantial reduction in the prices of all current models, made concurrently with Mr. Schwab's appearance on the scene.

The cuts made range from $500 on some models to a minimum of $100. The coupe, formerly listing at $3990, now is offered at $3490; the 4-passenger sport model, formerly selling at $2990, now is priced at $2790; the 6-passenger touring car has been reduced from $2990 to $2640, and the roadster from $2950 to $2450.

In commenting on the present situation at Stutz and his identification with its control, Mr. Schwab gave this statement:

"Our plans for the conduct of the affairs of the Stutz simply embrace an extension of the activities of the institution and its development to the point which we believe it deserves to attain. We have subscribed whole-heartedly to President Thompson's plan and policies and intend to give him and the men around him every co-operation and support to assist them to carry through the aims that they have cherished so long."

The Supreme Motor Co. is distributor for the Stutz car in St. Louis.

It is planned in London to do [illegible] with all railways above [illegible], and the old roadbeds are to [illegible] into highways or [illegible] for motor traffic.

O'MEARA PROMOTED BY THE WHITE CO.

Martin O'Meara, who five years ago became affiliated with The White Company, manufacturers of the White trucks, as salesman with the St. Louis branch, and later joined the factories branch in Kansas City and eventually was appointed branch manager, has been elected a vice president of the factory with headquarters at Cleveland.

O'Meara, who is a St. Louisan, stopped off in St. Louis Friday to visit some friends before making a tour of the West and South.

McQUISTON-SHIELDS CO., TO DEAL IN USED CARS

H. P. McQuiston and Hugh H. Shields, both of whom have had many years' experience in the used car business in St. Louis, have formed a partnership under the name of the McQuiston-Shields Motor Car Co., with headquarters in the large two-story building at 3401-17 Locust street, formerly occupied by the Universal Painting Co.

The new company will specialize in the sale, trade and purchasing of used cars. The building, which has 23,000 square feet of floor space, is now being redecorated and when completed will be used as a sales room, service and repair shop and for storage.

MICHELSON OPENS MARATHON TIRE CO.

Henry L. Michelson, formerly with the Surplus Auto Accessory Brokerage Co. of Kansas City, has opened the Marathon Tire Co. at 3336 Locust street.

The Marathon Tire Co., which is a direct factory branch of the Marathon Tire Co. of Cuyohoga Falls, O., will also distribute the Corn Husker tire made by the Nebraska Rubber Co. of Omaha, Neb.

DAVIS PHAETON MAKES SYCAMORE HILL IN HIGH

The Davis Phaeton recently went over the top of Cincinnati's famous Sycamore Hill, at fourteen miles an hour in high speed, according to word received here by Monarch Motor Car Co., local distributors of the Davis Six.

"The Phaeton was driven by a man unfamiliar with the hill. The first time it reached the crest of the hill in high speed, at eight miles an hour. The second time, with three passengers, it went over the top at fourteen miles an hour in high speed."

Smart, sturdy—you won't find another two-passenger four cylinder roadster that compares with this new Buick in quality or in price.

Inspect it from any angle—snug, beautifully tailored top; long, low body lines; heavy one-piece crown fenders; lots of room for two people and two compartments for their luggage. A big steering wheel that comes up to you, a shifting lever that operates without bending forward, a transmission lock, and improvements which give 1923 Buicks a Class "A" insurance rating.

And, below the surface, the famous Buick Valve-in-Head motor and chassis with refinements throughout which set a new standard of quality and performance in automobiles.

Fire — Theft Insurance

Lowest Insurance Rates

All 1923 Buick models have been awarded Class "A" ratings by the underwriters, because of the safety of their electrical and gasoline systems. The transmission lock on all models also materially reduces the cost of theft insurance.

The Buick Line for 1923 comprises fourteen models: Fours—2 Pass. Roadster, $865; 5 Pass. Touring, $885; 3 Pass. Coupe, $1175; 5 Pass. Sedan, $1395; 5 Pass. Touring Sedan, $1325. Sixes—2 Pass. Roadster, $1175; 5 Pass. Touring, $1195; 5 Pass. Touring Sedan, $1935; 5 Pass. Sedan, $1985; 4 Pass. Coupe, $1895; 7 Pass. Touring, $1435; 7 Pass. Sedan, $2195; Sport Roadster, $1625; Sport Touring, $1675. Prices f. o. b. Flint. Ask about the G. M. A. C. Purchase Plan, which provides for Deferred Payments.

Scientific Principles Applied To Maintaining the "Appearance Value" of Motor Cars

The dull grey film that disfigures so many of the cars you see is not the natural aftermath of six months' running.

There is a cause.

Experts attribute it to the common use of grease and oil "polishes," which they condemn as a prime cause of speedy depreciation.

They say that the heat from the motor literally fries these compounds into the enameled surface of the hood, while atmospheric conditions cause them to "gum," forming the unsightly film that will make any car old before its time.

"Killed With Kindness" is the trade expression for a new car, its lustre lost beneath the gummy residue of oil and paste preparations.

NOW A GREASELESS WAY!

After years of laboratory experiments, Science has finally solved the problem of preserving motor car newness. Not merely to make them "look like new," but to make them stay new!

This with a non-greasy, non-sticky liquid which, unlike any other preparation you have ever seen, does not depend on a false lustre for its effect! Instead, it REMOVES all grease, road oil and grime from the surface so that the Original Factory Lustre, with its sparkling sheen of newness, is indefinitely retained!

WHAT IT IS

The name is Common-Sense Polish, the Greaseless Cleanser.

Use it as infrequently as twice a month and your car cannot grow old, for the simple reason that the factory finish will be kept on and grease and oil accumulation kept off. This result, plus an absolutely Bone-Dry, DUST-PROOF surface at all times, is UNQUALIFIEDLY GUARANTEED.

THE RULE TO FOLLOW

Make it a rule to use Common-Sense and nothing but Common-Sense on your new car and its "appearance value" will take care of itself. Within three years, 100,000 of America's leading garages have discarded oil and paste "polishes" for this remarkable preparation, while it practically Monopolizes the Sale of Polish in Every District Where Introduced.

WHERE TO BUY COMMON-SENSE

At the Department Stores, or your nearest Druggist, Accessory or Hardware Dealer has it, or can get it for you promptly. The first application will add at least $150.00 to the appearance of your car, but will cost you only $1.00. Will be mailed, postpaid, to any out-of-town address, direct from the laboratory, upon receipt of $1.00.

REO ANNOUNCES NEW PHAETON MODEL

The new Reo five-passenger phaeton, the first model of which was driven through from the factory by S. C. Kardell of the Kardell Motor Car Co., local distributers, will make its initial debut to the motoring public in St. Louis this week.

The new model is equipped with a top of new design, with gray interior trimmings and finished with special nickel molding and leather inserts.

Three-bar full nickel bumpers, front and rear, are features of the new Reo phaeton. A Boyce motometer, full nickel plated, keeps watch on the temperature of the motor. The radiator cap is of new design, made of German silver with ball handles. The headlights, also new in design, have nonglare lenses and are equipped with nickel bail. Small parking lights conserve the battery. There is also a combination parking light and combination stop signal on the rear.

Aluminum is used generously in the trimmings of the new model. Step plates and kick plates of heavy solid aluminum save the running boards from wear and enhance the appearance of the car. The radiator core is nickel plated for appearance and protection. Steel disc wheels, with tires inflating from the outside, four Royal cord 32"x4" tires and an extra rim, are standard equipment.

The windshield, a new Reo design, with integral sidewings and nickel-plated frame is good looking and insures better vision and greater protection against rain or snow.

An electric lighter of fine quality for cigars is handily placed on the instrument board, also an eight-day keyless clock. The steering wheel is finished in American walnut with arms also of walnut.

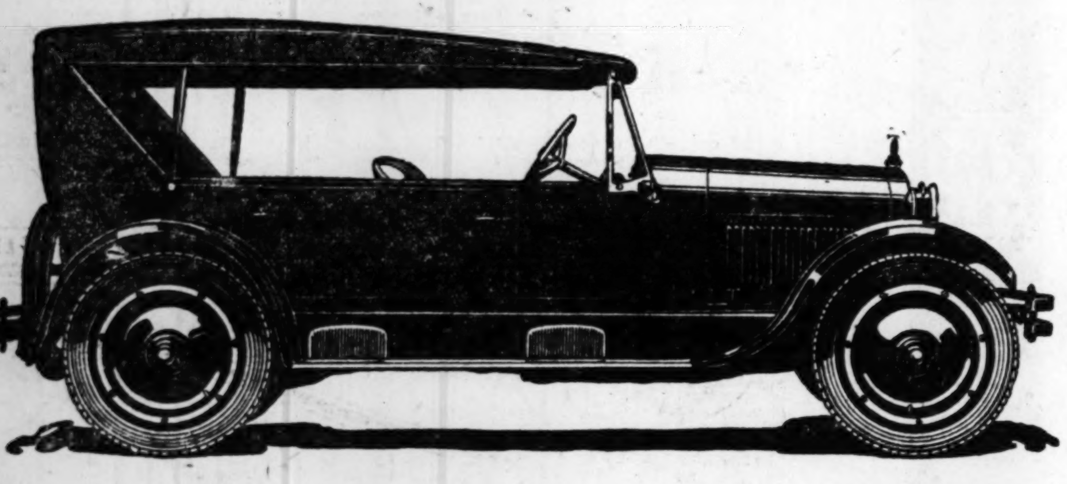
THE NEW REO PHAETON



A Revelation of how much 1645 dollars can achieve when they are made to do their best

To delight the eyes, there are long low lines, a body of shining Gulfstream Blue or quiet Cuban Gray, a newly created Reo top, gray interior trimmings and upholstery, and fenders and steel wheels of black.

For crawls and spurts in heavy traffic, for mud and sand in detour lanes, for hills and stretches of open road, there are six Reo cylinders, with remarkable giant intake valves.

To defeat the shocks of a hundred thousand miles and more, there is the Reo double chassis, with its extra low-hung inner frame in which the power plant is suspended.

For the body's ease there are genuine Marshall springs, low seats with deep cushions of soft Spanish leather, thick carpets fitted to the floors, and ample leg-room for six-foot men.

Every essential of comfort and enduring worth is there in heaped-up Reo measure.

—and then these

For protection against scar and mar, there are C. & G. three-barred, full-nickeled bumpers front and rear—seven aluminum guard bars on the back panel—aluminum moulding at the back of the hood to prevent scratching when the hood is lifted—and, on the running board, step-plates and kick-plates of heavy aluminum.

To defy the weather, there are Reo-designed, clear-vision curtains—made to pack flat in a special compartment—a cleaner-equipped windshield with integral side-wings, and glass so clear that there seems to be none.

For light, there are nickel-bailed headlamps of new design, small parking lights near the windshield braces to conserve the batteries, a special stop-signal and parking light at the rear, and a tonneau light with concealed wire long enough to serve as an extension inspection lamp.

Among the minor conveniences, there are two curtained compartments, in the backs of the front seats, for wraps and packages—between the two there is a disappearing vanity case—and on the dash, in addition to the usual equipment, an electric lighter and an eight-day keyless clock.

By providing these and many other things, we have striven to give the owners of the First Phaeton Reo, from the beginning, every desirable thing that the experienced motorist wants. By getting them all at once and built in, he gets them at manufacturer's prices—so that even in little things every one of his dollars is enabled to do its very best.

MUSTER a few of the facts that stamp Type 61 as a fine car, then see if you do not agree with its owners that the new Cadillac is an outstanding motor car value.

In the first place, you know that Cadillac has had the advantage of twenty years experience in building exclusively one quality car.

You know that out of its unique experience Cadillac has evolved a standard of craftsmanship and precision manufacture that could scarcely be arrived at in any other way.

You are aware that the Type 61 Cadillac, built in accordance with these precision methods, is declared by European and American engineers to surpass all previous Cadillac records for dependability.

Indeed, many critics go even further in their admiration of the new Cadillac, and agree almost unanimously that Type 61, in beauty, comfort, power and all-round perform-ability, is the Standard of the World.

The public, itself, in conclusive confirmation of this verdict, registers its approval of the new Cadillac by buying more Type 61 Cadillac cars than all other cars combined selling at the Cadillac price or higher.

These things are not alone our testimony—they are the acknowledged facts, and as such are of peculiar importance to buyers of high grade automobiles.

We believe that almost every individual, after careful consideration, will understand the justice of the majority decision; that Type 61 Cadillac is both the Standard of the World and the world's greatest motor car value.

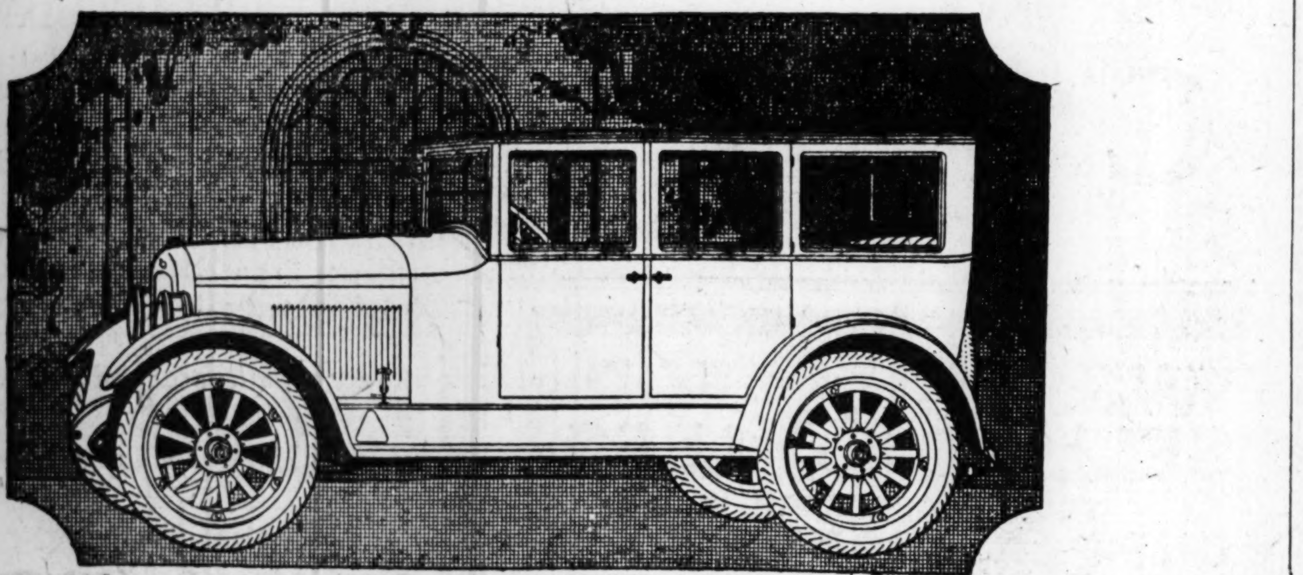
A New Standard of Value



Six Cylinders—Four Doors—$1465

Take a look at the Jewett Sedan in the illustration. Have you ever seen smarter lines—more distinctive appearance?

Then remember that it has an all metal body with four doors and the best of coach work. That means no embarrassing rattles or squeaks.

Inside you will find soft, inviting upholstery—broad seats—all those appointments that spell comfort and pride of ownership.

Up under the hood is a fifty horse power, six cylinder motor offering vast reserve power and the smoothest of riding qualities.

Under the body is a superb chassis—as strong as fine engineering can make it—designed and endorsed by the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company.

Could you ask for anything more in appearance, comfort, power and dependability. Then try to realize that all this can be yours for $1465 f. o. b. Detroit.

Now $1275

TOURING

SAVINGS resulting from capacity manufacture are now offered to the buyer of the Studebaker Special-Six. The new price of $1275 is $200 under its former price.

Studebaker reductions became effective August 1st after Studebaker had completed the biggest seven months in its 70 years' history. And at a time when Studebaker had 15,000 unfilled orders on hand! It is a Studebaker policy of long standing to share manufacturing savings with the customer.

The performance, durability, comfort and quality of the Special-Six are recognized everywhere. And here's new proof of its endurance: Studebaker's sales of repair parts, covering accidents as well as service, for the first seven months of 1922 were less than they were for the first seven months of 1919, in spite of the fact that 186,000 new cars were sold and put into operation since January 1, 1920.

The Special-Six at $1275 represents a new standard of value—the greatest value Studebaker has ever offered and that means a value that is positively unapproached anywhere in the industry.

AUTO DEALERS ELECT TWO NEW DIRECTORS

The board of directors of the St. Louis Automobile Dealers' Association, at a meeting held Tuesday, elected two new directors to fill vacancies caused by the resignations of Webster Colburn, formerly of the Dorris Motor Car Co., and C. A. Cole, formerly of the F. C. Meyer Motor Co.

G. W. D. Donnelly, president of the Supreme Motor Co., was elected to succeed Colburn and Fred H. Squires of the White Co., was elected to succeed Cole and to represent the truck intersts of the association.

It is expected that a considerable delegation of the members of the association will go with the Chamber of Commerce Special Train to Sedalia, Mo., Tuesday, for St. Louis Day at the Missouri State Fair.

Secretary Robert E. Lee, who has been at home ill for nearly two months, has recovered sufficiently to be at his office again.

The regular meetings and general activities of the association will be resumed in September. The first of these activities will be a meeting of demonstrators and instructors who will hear lectures by representatives of the Safety Council including W. L. Patterson, safety engineer, on the proper method of teaching new owners of automobiles how to drive safely.

NEW GARDNER MODELS TO BE ANNOUNCED SOON

Advices are that the Gardner Motor Co., Inc., will announce shortly two new closed models consisting of a new sedan and a business coupe.

These jobs will be priced at a very low figure. The Gardner one-year full value warranty covers both open and closed car models.

The sedan will sell $250 under the price of the 1922 model—in fact the manufacturer states that it was designed to sell for $1595 but because of increased production facilities and the growing demand for Gardner products the price will be $1345 factory.

The business coupe is a new model to the line and has many features. This model will sell at $1095 factory.

Both models have permanent metal sun visor, rain-proof windshields and come completely equipped with many conveniences and comfort features seldom found in cars of this price.

NEW PEERLESS TO BE AN EIGHT

The new Peerless will be an "eight"—that much has been admitted at the factory in Cleveland during the last week with reference to the new car which R. H. Collins and his associates will announce to the public the last of next week.

During the past two weeks automobile dealers and owners have besieged the factory in efforts to obtain the first authoritative description of the new car, as reports going around had it that the factory had intended to discontinue building eight-cylinder cars and would produce a six-cylinder model. But this much, however, was denied by President Collins, who stated that the factory had no intentions of abandoning the eight-cylinder principal in the new models.

RAIL WORKER SUES 7 UNIONS FOR $100,000

Webster Groves Man Charges He Was Beaten After Being Taken to Union Hall.

Manly Daniel of Webster Groves, an employe of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, filed suit yesterday for $100,000 damages against seven union labor organizations and two officers of labor organizations, charging that he was taken forcibly to a hall used by the union organizations and that there he was beaten severely. He asks for $50,000 damages for the injuries suffered and $50,000 because he was deprived of his liberty for one hour.

The petition declares that until June 3 this year Daniel was employed in the valuation department of the Missouri Pacific. On that date, it states, he was transferred to the Rankin avenue yards, where he was employed as a truck repair man.

The charge is made that on July 7 he was accosted by representatives of the organization and persons defendants in the suit and was escorted five blocks from the Grand boulevard viaduct to union headquarters, the location of which is not given.

It is charged that a meeting of union men was in progress at the hall and that persons present set upon Daniel and severely beat and kicked him "until his body was a mass of bruises."

The defendants named are: International Association of Machinists, International Association of Boiler Makers, Iron, Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop-forgers and Helpers, Amalgamated Sheet Workers' International Alliance, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, J. H. Rice, chairman of the International Association of Machinists, and J. J. Mockler, president of the local lodge of Blacksmiths and Helpers.

Officers of the defendant organizations said today they were not sufficiently familiar with the case to discuss it.

HUGE FISH HATCHERY PLANNED IN CHICAGO FOR GREAT LAKES

Largest Fresh Water Aquarium in World Also Will Be Built in Lincoln Park.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—A huge fish hatchery which will supply 10,000,000 fish for Lake Michigan annually, and the largest fresh water aquarium in the world are projects now being developed by the Lincoln Park board of this city. The hatchery and aquarium will be under one roof in a building now being constructed just south of the lion house in Lincoln Park.

By means of the hatchery the sponsors of the project hope to keep the lake supplied with bass, trout, pike, muskellunge and other fish common to the Great Lakes.

The building housing the two projects will be of brick and stone with tile roof, one story in height and a public space in the center which will contain a pool and fountain. Fifty-six concrete tanks, lined with natural rock and fronted by plate glass one to one and one-half inches thick, will be constructed along the sides of the building, and in these all varieties of fresh water fish from the largest lake and river game fish to the smallest tropiclas will be exhibited.

The tanks will be lighted directly by continuous skylights and also by electricity so that the building may be opened in the evening.

ANTICIPATION!

What joys ANTICIPATION brings!

What boy or girl, youth or maiden has not hurried to the realms of Somnus to lose themselves in the arms of Morpheus that the expected joys of the coming day be imagined nearer realization?

Then comes the morrow! But Ah! The pleasure is more than half spent!

Realization quickly ends the dream!

Come again, oh! ANTICIPATION, for truly thou art greater than REALIZATION!

Thou art the sister of Hope, than which there is nothing so comforting.

ABBAS HILMI, FORMER KHEDIVE, HOPES TO RETURN TO EGYPT

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

GENEVA, Switzerland, Aug. 1.—Abbas Hilmi, at one time Khedive of Egypt, who has decided to spend part of his exile in Switzerland, says that Americans, rather than British or French, were the first to aid modern Egypt to consolidate the military and commercial strength of the new nation.

"American officers," the ex-Khedive told the correspondent, "instructed and trained the Egyptian military staff and founded military schools in Egypt before the French and English arrived, and those schools were the basis of the present military force in Egypt. The American military mission remained in Egypt from 1870 to 1880 and, under the command of Gen. Stone, aided the Egyptian army with great success in operations against the Sudan and Abysinnia.

"Egypt owes her cotton industry, also, to the United States," continued Abbas Hilmi. "The first plantings were made with American seed and from these there has grown the production of a staple that is now sold all over the world."

Abbas Hilmi still clings to the hope that he will some day be able to go back to Egypt and rule over his people, who, he declares, want him to come back, and this in spite of the official decree issued by the present Egyptian Government recently declaring that if he returns he will be arrested and escorted to the frontier. "I have proofs," he said, "that my people want me back in Egypt, and one day, perhaps, when the British have left the country, I shall return and rule over them again."

HYDE READY FOR FIGHT TO CONTROL STATE MACHINE

CLEMENTS AFFAIR STARTED ACTIVITIES

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Aug. 19.—Governor Hyde and his political advisers, after three days of conferences, telegraphing and long distance telephoning, have finished their trenches in preparation for a fight to hold control of the state organization and now are waiting for Reginald R. Brewster of Kansas City, republican nominee for United States senator, either to come forward with a flag of truce, or to "crack loose" with hostilities.

Brewster was nominated through the combined efforts of the Hyde administration machine and the Old Guard coalition of Walter S. Dickey, Charles D. Morris, E. E. E. McJimsey, National Committeeman Jacob L. Babler and their cohorts. In the beginning Brewster was regarded as the partical choice of the Hyde "house cleaning" wing of the party. Toward the close of the primary campaign however, when Dickey, the high priest of Missouri Republican reactionaries, was acting as his personal escort in hand-shaking trips over the state, opinion veered and Brewster came to be regarded as Dickey's candidate.

Hyde Suggested Clements.

So, with the primary disposed of, Gov. Hyde suggested to Brewster that the next thing would be to re-elect Dr. E. B. Clements of Macon as chairman of the Republican State Committee. Clements became chairman about 18 months ago when J. G. Hughes, who had been appointed State Bank Commissioner, resigned. Clements' election being a victory for the administration over old guard politicans who opposed the program.

"Well," said Brewster, "let's not be in a hurry, we'll have to see about that," or words to that effect.

The Governor, who sat in the conference in Kansas City, out of which came Brewster's candidacy, previously had been warned that maybe the affections of the nominee had been alienated by Dickey. So when Brewster appeared coy at the Clements' suggestion, the Governor wasted no time whatever, but sent out a hurry call for Clements, Lieutenant-Governor Hiram Lloyd and a number of others, and got ready to fight. The Governor and his friends previously had taken care to prepare for such a contingency by getting their sympathizers elected to a large number of places on the State Committee, claiming to have won 18 of the 32 places, with the promise of possibly four more votes for Clements, if needed.

Clements, who is a man of some means and appreciation of the softer sides of life, is known not to thirst insatiably for the care and thankless worries of the chairmanship. But he also has no desire to allow Dickey or anyone else to name an antiadministration chairman at this time.

May Overturn a Precedent.

Should Brewster and Dickey stand fast against the Hyde program, and should it be necessary for the State administration to override their wishes, as it thinks it can do, and will do if need be, a precedent of long standing will have been overturned. For it has been the custom in off years to let the leading candidate virtually name the committee chairman.

It is known that Babler and the other old-guard leaders are especially anxious to get control of the State Committee at this time because this State Committee will be in office when the next set of delgates to a State and national convention in 1924, are selected. And such machinery is a big help in controlling delegates, a matter of large interest to Babler and his friends.

No word has reached the administration camp from either Brewster or Dickey for several days, so it is not known what course they have decided upon. Brewster has been invited by Clements to attend a meeting of the old State Committee in St. Louis Tuesday, at which time the place for holding the State platform convention, Sept. 12, will be chosen. It is not known, however, whether he will attend. It has been suggested that the Republican convention be held in St. Louis though Springfield asked for the meeting.

Strikers Sue Police Chief.

By the Associated Press.

TOPEKA, Kan., Aug. 19.—Suit was filed in the district court here this afternoon by five striking Santa Fe shopmen for $36,000 against Chief of police Morris Leonard, charging they were placed under arrest and held four hours by Leonard, without cause. The petition states that their arrest followed a report to the police that a mob was forming. The plaintiffs deny that they were members of a mob or that they had been guilty of any misconduct prior to arrest.

FARRINGTON OUTLINES CLEVELAND ATTITUDE

Illinois Miners' Head Calls Reports That He Refused to Sign Inter-State Agreement Propaganda.

The following statement of his attitude in the Cleveland conference is made by Frank Farrington, president of the United Mine Workers of Illinois, in the current issue of "The Illinois Miner," a weekly paper published by the Executive Board of the Illinois district:

"Press reports to the effect that I refused to sign an interstate agreement at Cleveland were nothing more than enemy propaganda, inspired to deceive our members into the belief that I was trying to prevent the making of an interstate agreement and to lay the groundwork to blame me for the failure to secure the interstate conference which the miners of the country have been striking to enforce and which we have been repeatedly told must be and would be held.

"The Cleveland conference was in no way a central field interstate conference embracing Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois, and that fact was publicly admitted while we were in Cleveland, consequently a central field interstate agreement could not result from the conference and therefore I could not refuse to sign one as there was none to be signed.

"Tonnage Claim Inflated."

"Originally the conference was made up of an inconsequential number of operators from Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, some strip pit operators from Indiana and one lone strip pit operator from Illinois, all of whom claimed to represent an annual production of 40,000,000 tons out of a tonnage of 200,000,000 tons produced in the central field. The tonnage these operators claimed to represent was greatly inflated as in reality they did not represent an actual production of more than 25,000,000 tons.

"In the case of the person who claimed to represent the strip-mining company in Illinois, the president of the company publicly declared that he was not authorized to do so, which meant that not a single operator from Illinois was in attendance at the conference.

"My position in the conference was that I would refuse to sign a so-called interstate agreement applicable to Illinois, with only this one irresponsible person present to sign for the Illinois operators. For me to sign an agreement under such circumstances would mean that none of the Illinois operators would be bound by the agreement and the very best that could be said for it would be that one strip mine in Illinois would be allowed to start work while the rest of our members would be obliged to continue on strike until an agreeemnt applicable to the rest of the miners in Illinois could be secured.

"Scope Enlarged."

"During the progress of the conference certain Ohio operators withdrew and then the miners decided to enlarge the scope of the conference so as to include a few operators from West Virginia, Central Pennsylvania and Michigan. Their production added to the tonnage already represented in the conference made a grand total of 60,000,000 tons or 15,000,000 tons less than is produced annually in Illinois alone.

"It was decided to sign up the 60,000,000 tons and it was under the circumstances herein outlined that the basic so-called interstate agreement was completed and with this 60,000,000 added to the tonnage produced in the districts south of the Ohio River, the Illinois miners are obliged to fight on for a state agreement.

"I regard the case of signing an agreement with a handful of operators scattered over several states and then calling it a 'basic interstate agreement' as being on a level with the practice of signing state agreements and as being a complete abandonment of the original international policy."

Women Weep but Know Not Why.

JUNCTION CITY, Kan., Aug. 19.—Tear gas, used by Kansas National Guards encamped on the Fort Riley military reservation for demonstration purposes, caused discomfort to scores of motorists last night when a change of wind spread it over a large area. Many women, ignorant of the cause of their tears, became frightened when they entered the gas belt and began to weep copiously.

CONVICTS' BALL GAMES ON OUTSIDE STOPPED

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Aug. 19.—No more baseball games outside the penitentiary walls will be played by the white convicts team, Warden Hill has decreed. His decision was caused, it is understood, by recent occurrence at Versailles, Morgan County, where the white convicts recently played ball, and when one of them got drunk and created a disturbance, and another borrowed a taxicab without leave and broke a wheel before going back with the vehicle.

Throughout this administration, and, it is said, under previous ones, it has been customary to allow the convict teams, of which there are two, one of whites, one of negroes, to play outside teams in small towns within truck distance of Jefferson City. On these trips the convicts have been intrusted to the care of two guards only, no prison official accompanying the party.

No complaint has been received against actions of the negro team and its liberties have not been restricted, it was said at the prison.

Throughout this administration at frequent intervals there have been complaints that too much liberty is allowed convicts. There were a number of incidents connected with convict chauffeurs of prison automobiles, which have been highly objectionable to Jefferson City folk. There has been no noticeable tightening of discipline, however.

PLAN SCHOOL FOR HOTEL COOKS

A training school for hotel cooks will be discussed at the annual convention of the International Association of Stewards at Hotel Statler Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

Two other national conventions will be held here in the next two weeks. There will be sections on general practice, sanitary science and on education and research. A meeting of members of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture will be held in connection with the veterinary gathering. Dr. J. R. Mohler, chief of the bureau, will attend.

PROTECTION FOR COTTON BELT

An order directing United States Marshal Lynch to furnish deputies for the protection of employes and property of the St. Louis Southwestern (Cotton Belt) Railroad, at Illmo, Mo., was received by the Clerk of the United States District Court yesterday from Federal Judge Woodrough, sitting in Kansas City.

Judge Woodrough yesterday granted a temporary restraining order to the railroad against striking shop crafts men, returnable here Aug. 28. Marshal Lynch will detail deputies to duty in Illmo after he has had a conference with officers of the railroad.

CHIT-CHAT FROM GAY QUARTERS ABOUT PARIS

King Alfonso at Deauville Where Gaming Occupies Rainy Afternoons—Suggestion of Fashion's Trend.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—King Alfonso of Spain is leading the social world at Deauville, the world famous French seaside resort. Wherever the King goes scores of merrymakers of noble birth gather. The Shah of Persia, the Crown Princes of the Balkans, Prince Christopher of Greece, the Maharajah of Kapurthala, Queens of "Movieland" and captains of industry cluster about him wherever he is.

The King is the special favorite of all varieties of women, who hope that he might kiss their hand or dance with them at the evening ball.

Last Sunday the Abbot was beside himself, because the mass was finished when King Alfonso entered. On seeing the King, the Abbot promptly started it all over again. The Spanish monarch, as always, drives his own big Spanish car and at a speed that threatens to drive Deauville's Chief of Police into apoplexy.

Deauville has been drenched in rain during the last few weeks. This has made the Casino a refuge for the crowds, who wait three deep around the baccarat and Chemin-le-Fer tables for a chance to play. Fortunes have been won and lost on these rainy afternoons. The bank recently dropped 3,000,000 francs in a few hours.

Andrew Citroen, the Henry Ford of France, is reported to have won 1,000,000 francs recently in Deauville sitting with Senor Anibal de Meza, the Cuban planter. He is credited with running 10,000 francs into 800,000. Americans and British make up the great majority of the visitors.

Fashion moulders, flushed with their success in resurrecting the styles of our grandmothers, have plunged further into history in search of inspiration. Several of the biggest dressmakers are now showing dresses and hats patterned after the designs of the middle ages. They have attracted much attention and their exhibitions have been described as good as a visit to a medieval museum.

These "medieval" dresses have been restored in great detail. They are one-piece dresses with three-quarter length coats fitted to the waist. Fur cuffs extend at the elbow and there is a narrow band of fur around the neck. All have high collars, reaching from ear to ear and rising high enough to form a half moon extending between the shoulders and above the head.

The dresses have long, full skirts and are fitted with bodices. Some of the collars have pleated ruffles of wide lace. Helmets of medieval design are worn with these costumes. They cover the head entirely and extend down the back like tight-fitting caps. The helmets are of velvet while the half moon collars are of fur.

Silver cloth is used to give the hat a more armorial appearance. The helmet effect is heightened by the embroidery design and the many steel trimmings.

The American team of women athletes, competing tomorrow in the first international track meet for women at Pershing stadium, have attracted more attention from the public and the press than either the British, Swiss or Czecho-Slovakian teams, whose members had previously performed in France.

Cartoonists have depicted the Americans in training, while sporting editors have given columns to describing their preparatory efforts.

"Up to two years ago my money all went to doctors and medicine for my stomach trouble. I was constantly filled with gas and no medicine helped me permanently until I tried a bottle of Mayr's Wonderful Remedy at that time with excellent results. Now I am using my money in paying for a home." OCEAN DERBY PLANNED FOR GREAT LINERS

Mauretania Thus Far Has Best Record (25.29 Knots) for Whole Voyage.

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—"An ocean Derby" will be held on the Atlantic this summer to determine the fastest of the great liners on the Southampton-New York run. The position of the vessels in this contest for the Atlantic blue ribbon is as follows, the figures denoting the best speed for a whole voyage during the current season:

1. Mauretania	25.29 knots
2. Majestic	24.02
3. Berengaria	23.38
4. Aquitania	23.28
5. Olympic	22.55
6. Homeric	18.69

All these vessels, with the exception of the Homeric, burn oil fuel. Thus, as well as settling the speed championship, the race will provide useful data for comparing the new method of making steam by oil with the old method of using coal.

The contest has progressed far enough to reveal that the race now lies between the Mauretania and the Majestic. Whether the latter can deprive the former of her position as the "Atlantic Speed Queen" is the great topic in ocean shipping circles. There is much argument and heavy betting.

The Majestic, like the Berengaria, is German built. She was designed to capture size and speed records from Britain. Her backers point out that she has shown her qualities in the latter respect by doing a recent sprint at 27.82 knots, and that as she is only beginning to "feel her engines," she will make things hum for her British-built competitors.

The Mauretania's backers reply that she, too, has not yet settled down since her conversion to oil-burning; that if spurting counts for anything she has a 28.2 knots spurt to her credit, and that with a former whole voyage achievement of more than 26 knots, she will, if needed, still show all comers a clean pair of heels.

With all this keen but good-natured rivalry among the "greyhounds of the ocean," new records may be looked for before long. The new Berengaria may produce some surprises, now that she has taken to oil fuel, and she is looked upon as "the dark horse" of the Atlantic.

AVIATION CLUB URGES PLANE AS MEANS OF EXPLORATION

By the Associated Press

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—The airplane as a means of entering and exploring the vast deserts and jungles and other places unknown to civilization is proposed by the Chicago Aviation News, organ of the Aviation Club of Chicago.

A trip into the northern extremities of Canada by two or three planes, equipped for hunting big game, locating minerals, oil, rare stones and metals and to explore and photographically map the country, is proposed and a call made for opinions as to the trip's feasibility.

There are many places on the earth's surface, it was pointed out, where civilized man has never stood. The interior of Africa, considered almost impenetrable, would be but a few days' trip for an airplane, equipped with two or three motors, any one of which would be able to fly the machine, and with recessible landing gear which enables safe landing on almost any ground, it was asserted.

"Labrador is almost an unknown country because of the length and severity of winter climate, travel being possible only during the two summer months of July and August," the publication said, "an airplane could travel to the center of the peninsula in three days, spend 50 days in exploration and return before Sept. 1."

DR. W. O. COFFEE

Relieving Deafness, Head Noises, Catarrh With New Treatment Wednesday and Thursday.

Dr. W. O. Coffee, the noted specialist, says that catarrh is a constitutional condition, must be treated through the system as well as the nose, head and throat. He says 90% of the cases of deafness, head noises and ulcers of the ears are caused from catarrh. If the hearing is getting better and worse with each cold, or noises gradually getting worse, or one ear is getting real bad and the other just getting started with crackling or other noises, most cases can be helped or completely relieved by his new non-surgical treatment. He treats diseased tonsils, diseased turbinated bones. He treats 50 patients a day here and is making many wonderful cures. J. R. Meyer of East St. Louis, Ill., had catarrh, deafness and head noises 20 years; completely relieved. Mrs. Minnie Schierer, 3210 Pestalozzi st., almost totally deaf, suffered 48 years; hearing being rapidly restored. J. W. Proctor, 3120 Whittier st., almost totally deaf in one ear 26 years; hearing restored almost normal. J. C. Patterson, Elmer, Mo., 86 years old, suffered with catarrh, deafness and head noises 8 years; completely relieved. If you suffer with deafness, head noises or catarrh of the nose, head, throat or system, he wants to examine and explain his new method of treatment to you free of charge. If you cannot come to St. Louis write him for his book on catarrh, deafness, head noises, eye diseases, cross-eyes. He will send it free. He says catarrh often causes stomach trouble, rheumatism, etc. He is in his St. Louis offices, room 400 Odd Fellows' Bldg., 816 Olive st., every Wednesday and Thursday. Hours 8:30 to 4:30. He will make a special 20% discount on glasses fitted and all operations this month. Don't submit to an operation until you get his opinion.

An Improvement That Reduces the Cost of Your Glasses

Our Optometric Department has recently been reorganized and enlarged. Among the many new features installed has been a complete new optometric laboratory fully equipped with all the very latest scientific instruments employed in the grinding of lenses and the fitting of frames. In consequence of these greatly increased facilities our optometrists, Dr. Arthur W. Cuquet and Dr. Thomas J. McWay, are enabled to control—on our own premises—every step in the correction of visual defects from the examination of the eye to the grinding of the lenses and the fitting of the frames.

Needless to say that our prices are much less than others not so favorably situated with respect to modern laboratory resources.

WRECK INQUEST TO BE RESUMED TOMORROW

Hearing Continued Until Original Orders Signed by Engineer Weston Are Produced.

Further testimony will be taken by the Coroner tomorrow as to the cause of the collision of two Frisco passenger trains at Horine, 35 miles south of St. Louis, in Jefferson County, Wednesday morning. The Coroner's inquiry is in the case of George Weston, 56 years old, of 3824 McDonald avenue, engineer of the southbound train on the Memphis division, No. 801, which ran into a northbound train, 806, which was standing on the main track at Horine. Weston was injured and died Friday in the Frisco Hospital here.

The inquest was begun yesterday and continued by Deputy Coroner Dever when J. H. Stump of 3806 shaw avenue, the conductor on 801, admitted the orders he produced at the inquest were copies and not the original ones signed by Weston in the cab of his engine before departing from the Terminal sheds. The railroad company has placed blame for the accident on Weston for not preparing to take a siding at Horine. An order displayed to the Coroner specified that train 801 was to meet train 806 at Horine. Coroner Dever has asked the railroad to produce the original orders and to submit testimony relating to equipment on the locomotive of train 801.

Myron H. Weston, son of the dead engineer, who was fireman on his father's engine, had been called previous to the conductor. He said that his father had not shown him the orders, and that he had not asked about them because engine trouble had kept him engaged constantly from departure from Union Station until the time of the wreck.

He testified, however, that he had asked about No. 806, and that his father had replied that he had a register check on 806." The son explained that a "register check" was a check indicating that No. 806 had arrived in St. Louis, He commented, he said, that he had not seen No. 806, but that his father reiterated: "I have a check on it."

Continuing, the son testified, that when passing Schmitt, four miles north of Horine at about 45 miles an hour, he had observed smoke at Horine and concluded that there must be a train there, but whether it was on the main track or a siding, he could not tell. He said to his father, he testified: "Give it the big holder" (emergency brake) and that his father complied, reducing the speed to about 20 miles. Rounding a curve near Horine, he said, he observed the train ahead and jumped.

E. E. Jones of Chaffee, Mo., fireman on No. 806, was killed in the collision. An inquest in his case will be held in Jefferson County.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Proof that the value to the nation of the physical, mental, moral and patriotic training given civilians attending the army summer camps is "out of all proportions to the amount of money expended," will be exhibited before the President, members of the Cabinet and of Congress next Monday when 100 young men from the District of Columbia, Delaware, Pennsylvania and Maryland, attending the Camp Meade, Md., course parade in the capital.

Secretary Weeks made public today a letter inviting the Vice President and Speaker Gillett, as well as members of the House and Senate to join with President Harding and himself in reviewing the parade at the White House. He emphasized that the men are representative of the "thousands of patriotic young Americans from civil life receiving voluntary training" throughout the country, and expressed the hope that the day would come soon when funds would permit the expansion of the 28,000 in training this year to 100,000.

WRITING ON THE SKY FORESEEN AS WAR AGENT OF THE FUTURE

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—"Skywriting" by aircraft is the latest aerial development to be predicted by British air experts. The Times expert points out it would be useful in spreading propaganda in enemy countries in future wars.

The writer says experiments have been made with the Morse code and that soon it will be possible to use luminous signals at night. He even pictures enemy planes trying to blot out this writing in the sky.

"Up to the present," he writes, "it has been used almost wholly for advertising, but there is no doubt that, in the near future, generously developed, it might easily rival tape machines and wireless telegraph, for dissemination of news. A simpler means of broadcasting is difficult to imagine.

"It is easy to foresee the stage when long messages will be written by co-operating machines."

The writer also foresees announcements of prizefights and other sporting results written luminously across the heavens for everyone to see.

Ground to Be Broken for Church.

Ground will be broken for the erection of the new Pilgrim Evangelical Church at Louisiana av. and Arsenal st., at 7 o'clock tonight. After the service refreshments will be served. The Rev. C. Kramer is the pastor.

Reader Takes Newer Form of Iron—Feels Years Younger

"Six weeks ago I saw a special offer in the paper telling how thousands of people grow old in looks and energy long before they are really old in years, because, as examinations by physicians have shown, an enormous number of people do not have enough iron in their blood. I have been taking Nuxated Iron for two weeks; the results are simply astounding. The roses have come back in my lips and cheeks, and I can conscientiously say that I feel ten years younger."

The above is a typical hypothetical case showing the results that have been achieved by a great many people since we started this "satisfaction or money back" offer on Nuxated Iron. We will make you the same guarantee. If, after taking the two weeks' treatment of Nuxated Iron, you do not feel and look years younger, we will promptly refund your money.

INCREASE IN MISSOURI SHOE INDUSTRY SHOWN

JEFFERSON CITY, Aug. 19.—Boots, shoes, slippers and other footwear to the value of $157,147,141 were turned out in Missouri during 1920 by 63 factories scattered over the state, announces a bulletin of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, constituting "advance information" from the 1921-22 Missouri Industrial "Red Book" just given publicity by Commissioner William H. Lewis.

The total value of Missouri-made footwear jumped from $52,522,006, the record in 1914, the year the World War began, to the present high-water mark of $157,147,141, a clear gain in aggregated worth of $104,625,135, or in excess of 199 per cent. While the higher cost of leather and other materials and supplies used in manufacturing boots and shoes and similar commodities, and reasonable increases in salaries and wages of those employed in the industry, helped to swell the total worth to the amount given, yet there was a substantial gain in quantity and quality of output.

Workers Well Paid.

It took a total of 21,644 men and women, boys and girls to manufacture and distribute Missouri's 1920 output of footwear, and this army was paid $24,104,108 in salaries and wages. Included among the employes, besides the actual skilled toilers who turned out 30,000,000 pairs of shoes, boots, slippers, pumps and similar commodities, were the hundreds of well-paid salesmen the Missouri shoe manufacturers depend upon to put their product into the hands of retailers, all presidents and similar corporation officials, superintendents of factories, accountants, auditors and bookkeepers, and, also, all miscellaneous office help, including the men and women who pack and otherwise prepare the finished article for distribution.

Missouri's 1920 shoe industry represented an invested capital of $47,555,039, as compared to $28,033,502 for the year 1914. The World War greatly stimulated the Missouri shoe industry, as figures which follow convincingly prove, giving the state at least third, if not second rank for value of the total production and quantity turned out. New York and Massachusetts are the only close competing states.

With $24,104,108 paid in 1920 by Missouri shoe factories to their 21,644 employes, the yearly average earning for each toiler was $1114. In 1914, with a total of $9,978,610 paid to 17,072 toilers, high and low in rank, the earning per capita was $585. The average increase in yearly earnings in six years, 1920 over 1914, was $529 for each worker, or 90.4 per cent.

The large increases in the salaries of presidents and other high-paid corporation officials, and of the traveling salesmen, helped materially to swell, statistically, not alone the annual earnings of skilled wage earners, but, also, the visible per capita increase in salaries and wages for all lesser paid manual and clerical employes.

The 1920 returns made by 63 Missouri factories indicate that to manufacture footwear which had a first wholesale selling value of $157,147,141, it took disbursements for materials and supplies, salaries and wages, rent and taxes and insurance, and all other purposes classed as "miscellaneous," totalling $143,073,973. With all disbursements apparently accounted for, the total earnings for all factories for the year aggregated $14,073,168, or a little over 9.8 per cent over all disbursements. The earnings also represented a little over 8.95 per cent of the first wholesale selling value of Missouri's total footwear manufacturing in 1920.

The 1920 disbursements for rent and taxes and insurance reached the total of $4,833,262 on the selling valuation of $157,147,141, or over 3.75 per cent, as compared to $2,105,440 for the year 1914 on boots, shoes and other footwear which had a total first wholesale selling value of $52,522,006, or 4 per cent.

St. Louis Figures.

Of 63 factories reporting, 32 were in St. Louis and turned out $90,942,833 worth of products, compared with $66,204,308 in goods manufactured in 31 factories throughout the State, compilations show.

Eight thousand, five hundred and nine of the boot and shoe workers were women. The remaining 13,135 were men workers.

More than four-fifths of the total capital invested is in footwear factories in St. Louis, according to the reports from manufacturers to the Labor Bureau. Missouri factories are valued at $47,555,039, and of that amount St. Louis factories are given at $38,262,283, compared with a total valuation of $9,292,756 for the entire remaining boot and shoe factories of the State.

WATER LILIES ABLOOM AT BOTANICAL GARDEN

Greatest Splendor of Tropical Specimens Presented Between 10 A. M. and 4 P. M.

August is the month of water lilies at the Missouri Botanical Garden, and this is the week of their full bloom.

Lilies have aristocratic rank in the plant world, with the crysanthemum and the orchid. They hold their heads with the haughiest blue bloods. The Chinese gave them esthetic reverence; the Egyptian decorative and artistic obeisance, while in India, Buddhism has always held the flower sacred.

Witness, the Chinese writer of the eleventh century: "Since the days of the T'ang dynasty (600 A. D.), it has been fashionable to admire the peony; but my favorite is the water lily. How stainless it rises from its slimy bed! How modestly it reposes on the clear pool—an emblem of purity and truth! In my opinion, the crysanthemum is the flower of retirement and culture; the peony, the flower of rank and culture; the water lily, the Lady Virtue, sans pareille."

In Egypt the water lily was figured on monuments and tombs 2500 years before the coming of Christ; the petals of the white lotus were intertwined with those of the blue in the carved funeral wreath of Rameses II.

The pink-tipped lotus of India is the sacred plant of the Buddhists, the flower upon which Buddha sits, the padma of the Hindu prayer.

Classification Three-Fold.

The general classification of lilies is three-fold: day-blooming tropical, night-blooming tropical and domestic. The garden is exhibiting its day-blooming tropical plants in one circular and two rectangular pools which occupy the space between the main gate and the palm house. Domestic varieties are to be found in the pools among the knolls (to the left of the entrance) and at the rear of the display houses on the edge of the wild garden. There are no night-blooming varieties.

The tropical lilies now blooming form what is asserted at the garden to be the best collection in the United States—some 15 varieties ranging in color from pink, through lavender to dark blue and up through blue tints to pure white. In size they run from a dainty diameter of four inches, a Mexican variety, to the huge blossom, Mrs. Edwards Whitaker, 12 inches across, a creation of the garden's horticulturist, G. N. Pring, who three years ago was awarded the second bronze medal for notable creations in the plant world in the 14-year history of the National Association of Gardeners. In all, there are about 15 varieties, with several hundred blooms. There are about 12 domestic varieties and 200 blooms.

Papyrus Specimens.

In the four corners of the rectangular pools are specimens of the Egyptian papyrus plant. The plant was the source of material upon which the first written history of the human race was inscribed. It has a stem resembling that of a palm and terminates in a bushy, grass-like growth. The pulp for papyrus-making came from the pith of the stem.

In the circular pool are four plants of the giant water platter, the leaves or pads of which reach a diameter of from four to six feet and which from a peculiar air-cell structure on their underside can support an evenly-distributed weight of 200 pounds. The texture of the pads resembles that of an elephant's hide. The plant is a native of the Amazon.

The tropical lilies present their maximum gorgeousness between 10 a. m. and 4 p. m. The domestic varieties are at their full from 10 a. m. to noon. The garden opens today at 2 p. m. and remains open until sunset. On week days it opens at 8 a. m.

RAILROAD SHARES SHOW STRENGTH AS WEEK CLOSES

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—The Evening Post, in its weekly copyrighted financial review, says:

"Business sentiment grew increasingly optimistic durng the week as the efforts to effect a solution of the labor controversies gave increasing promise of success, and as the grain and cotton markets began to recover after a period of receding prices. The adjournment of the London conference, following a series of fruitless negotiations, and the consequent break in the exchange of Continental countries immediately concerned in these deliberations, caused the markets at the beginning of the week to be swayed. The delay in the expected announcement of a basis of settlement for the coal strike and the impasse in the negotiations for ending the rail strike also had a depressing effect, but these unfavorable conditions proved to be short lived. Satisfactory progress towards settlement of the strike in the bituminous fields was soon announced and new tactics to deal with the anthracite and railway strike were undertaken under fair auspices.

"The close relation of our own economic welfare to that of Europe was again illustrated early this week when wheat and cotton declined sharply on news of the breakdown of reparations negotiations. Wheat dropped below a dollar a bushel before export buying, attracted by the low prices, brought some recovery. Cotton prices likewise rallied on the Census Bureau's showing of an abnormally low carryover at the end of the crop year and on reports of further deterioration of the new crop. The cotton market has shown a tendency to react after every substantial advance in prices, thus reflecting the uncertainty both as to prospective supply and as to prospective consumer demand with prices at their present levels. The recent tendency, however, towards higher values for this staple is held to be indicative that the trade has accepted the idea of a somewhat smaller yield than had originally been indicated in previous estimates.

"While a complete settlement of the strike in the unionized soft coal mines has not yet been effected, there is little reason to believe that the 65 per cent of the producing capacity now included in the Cleveland agreement will long remain idle. The mere sight of the competing mines in full operation should prove a strong inducement to those who are still holding out to fall into line and gain their share of the profits available to rival companies. The Cleveland agreement will increase weekly coal production to something more than 6,000,000 tons, which is far short of estimated requirements. But this is regarded as a preliminary step to a full settlement. The present outlook does not justify the view that the basic industries will be able immediately to resume their status quo upon the termination of the coal and rail strikes. For a considerable period the effects of the strikes will still be in evidence. The steel industry, for example, hardly hopes to attain again during the current year its high rate of production reached during the latter part of June. The steel corporation is now operating with about 60 per cent of its capacity compared with a rate of 75 per cent with the peak and the independents are operating at an average rate of 50 per cent. The system of priorities in coal distribution must be continued for some time.

"Had it not been for the crisis in the domestic labor situation the decline of the German mark to the low level of .07⅛ would have proved the sensation of the week. Germany has now reached the anomolous situation where the total gold value of its note circulation diminishes with each successive increment of paper currency. In other words, the gold value of outstanding note issues is less today than it was a year ago, although the quantity of paper marks has been more than doubled. For this reason there is constant complaint in that country of lack of money, in spite of the heavy inflation. Unless the allies soon abandon their policy of drift and unless Germany in turn makes drastic reforms in its domestic financial policies, German currency may be expected to follow the course of the Austrian crown, which a year ago had a value about two-thirds greater than the current value of the mark. The situation is fraught with economic and political dangers.

Rates Strong Saturday.

"Stocks moved forward in impressive fashion during this morning's short session, the advances in many of the standard dividend-paying railroad shares being little short of sensational. The majority of issues in this group sold at the highest prices of the year and not a few of them gained two points or more over the last previous quotations. As a whole, the industrials lagged somewhat behind the railroad shares, but there were many strong spots and during the second hour of the session many of the industrials came forward with a rush. The bond market was also active and strong, unusually so for a summer Saturday morning. Both gilt-edged and speculative corporation bonds were in demand at fractionally higher prices, and even the foreign Governments' issues were firm.

"Commodity markets were irregular, strength in cotton being offset by another drop in wheat. Wheat was sold for both long and shorts accounts, the September future got into new low ground in sinking nearly a cent below the dollar mark. Cotton, on the other hand, was in active demand, and for the greater part of the morning sold at a level about 60 points above the previous day's close, following a lower opening. The October future again got above 22 cents. Buying was attributed in the main to indications of week-end without rain in the Southwest, where it is badly needed.

"Business in foreign exchange was of the usual quiet week-end character. Somewhat more firmness was shown by the leading rates at the opening, but part of the early gains were lost before the close. Rates, however, were generally maintained at levels above yesterday's close. Sterling started at £4.48, an advance of ⅝ over Friday's last quotation and then receded ¼ of a cent. Francs also opening higher at 7.99 cents and dropped down to 7.95 cents at which price they were two points above the previous close. Italian lire were quiet and unchanged at 4.52 cents. Trading in Gemran marks was inactive with a quotation of .08¼ of a cent, compared with .07⅞ yesterday.

"A decrease of $2,380,460 in the surplus of the Clearing House banks brings this item at the end of the week to $48,620,650. Loan and discounts showed an increase of $3,298,000, while demand deposits were lower by $26,374,000 and time deposits increased $5,478,000. Reserves of member banks in the Federal Reserve Bank declined $5,226,000.

CURB TRADE IS ACTIVE AND MARKET RULES FIRM

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Trading was active in the day's short session on the Curb Exchange and the market generally was firm. Some irregularity was occasioned by the usual week-end realizing. This affected some of the recent leaders like Standard Oil of Indiana, Standard Oil of Kentucky and International Petroleum. Atlantic Lobus was quite a feature among the low priced issues, jumping from 9¾ to 11. Anglo American Oil was stronger and Southern States Oil was influenced by the statement that the company had exercised its option to acquire stock control of Verland Oil and Gas and had started immediate drilling of five new wells. An increase in Sou. States capitalization will be necessary in consequence of this deal.

R. H. Macy shares did better and Gimbel Bros. stock was steady. Some demand appeared again on Cuban Dominican Sugar. Mesabi Iron was well supported. The motor stocks were quiet and unchanged with the exception of Moon Motors, in which there was considerable activity anticipating the transfer of the stock to the Stock Exchange.

Foreign Exchange

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—The Evening Post in its weekly copyright review of the foreign exchange market, says:

"Adjustment of the highest importance proceeded along different lines in the foreign exchange market in the past week, the most significant feature being the continued large inquiry and trading in sterling exchange with reference to the action of other exchanges. Buying orders for sterling orders were so large that principal markets on various days were scraped bare of offerings by local banking dealers of the high class. There was a good deal of conjecture as to the purpose or cause of this heavy demand, which increased in volume each day of the week.

"Political and commercial developments caused irregular trading in other documents. French exchange being unsettled at frequent intervals and selling down from 8.06 to 7.89. Italian and Belgian moved in unison with the French exchange, declining and rallying as the French rate varied in its movements. German exchange was decidely influenced by the various developments including the lack of results at the Allied conference, and there was no firm demand for exchange on Germany at any time. The rate for marks falling from the high of .12⅛ at the beginning of the week to .07⅛ yesterday. There were many strong features in the world exchanges outside of these movements in European business. Canadian exchange, which has been steadily advancing sold at par for the first time since 1914. Czecho-Slovakia was another to continue its upward movement and selling on Thursday at 13.03 cents to the crown. Exchange on Holland was also strong, guilder checks moving up from 38.80 to 39.00. Rumanian exchange, after showing pronounced strength in the preceeding two weeks, lost all the gain which was then made, but made a good rally yesterday.

"Business in foreign exchange was of the usual quiet week-end character. Somewhat more firmness was shown by the leading rates at the opening, but part of the early gains were lost before the close. Rates, however, were generally maintained at levels above yesterday's close. Sterling started at £4.48, an advance of ⅝ over Friday's last quotation, and then receded ¼ of a cent. Francs also opening higher at 7.99 cents and dropped down to 7.95 cents, at which price they were two points above the previous close. Italian lire were quiet and unchanged at 4.52 cents. Trading in German marks was inactive with a quotation of .08¼ of a cent, compared with .07⅞ yesterday.

BRITISH EXPORTS TO GERMANY SHOW LARGE INCREASE

Trade Returns Reveal Value of First Half Year Shipments Were £14,000,000 as Compared With £1,700,000 a Year Ago—Reparation Problem.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and New York Evening Post.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Arthur W. Kiddy, editor of Bankers' Magazine and financial editor of the London Morning Post in financial review today, says:

"The crisis following the collapse of the London conference is serious because of two separate dangers. One of these is the possibility of precipitate unwise action by either party; the other is a policy of drift. The former might mean immediate acute political trouble; the latter would inevitably occasion ultimate complete economic collapse of Germany and possibly of France. The situation, in fact, requires after the briefest interlude for reflection the formulation of fresh plans with increasing recognition of the necessity for final practical settlement.

"Henry Bell, one of the directors of Lloyd's Bank, advocates final further reparation payments of £2,100,000,000, to commence after a moratorium of two years, but the capital amount in bonds is to be divided forthwith among the allies. Meanwhile, there is a tendency in Germany, Austria and Poland to conduct all external trade operations in foreign currencies, and this tends to increase the activity here in the money market.

"The feature of the latest trade returns is an increase in exports to Germany, the value of which for the first half year amount to £14,000,000, against £1,700,000 a year ago, and the proportionate increase is much greater for the month of July. Moreover, a similar increase in our trade with other near European countries is also believed to be traceable to German activity, and the extent to which the activity of German trade, with full employment, is stimulated by the depreciated mark and maintained, despite financial anxieties, enormously complicates a clear comprehension of the problem of German reparation payments."

Wall Street News and Comment
—SPECIAL DAILY—

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—The railway strike was not disposed of as had been hoped, at yesterday's conference, but Will street's confidence in the belief that the settlement would come next week went ahead with its business this morning just as if the strike were over.

Railway stocks which had held back on preceding days were taken up under a rush of buying, and many of them passed through their former highs of the year. Gains of a point to nearly 3 points occurred in such standard dividend payers as Union Pacific, New York Central, Atchison, Norfolk & Western and Southern Pacific. Shares of the Northwestern roads were very much in demand, as they have been on every occasion recently when the rails have been prominent in the trading. Lower priced non-dividend paying issues came in for their share of attention, but were not as conspicuous relatively as the old line dividend stocks.

In this diversion in the railway stocks the market was getting ready for the enormous freight movement talked of as likely to follow the conclusion of the rail and coal strikes. Also it was said investment buying which had held back awaiting the outcome of the labor troubles, poured into the market and this had a lot to do with the advance in the railway stocks. It was an active two hours also in railway bonds, but the rising tendency here was not as marked as it was in the stocks.

The industrial list did not suffer from the taking up of the rails except to the extent that the rise was partially checked in stocks that had been leading the market upward earlier in the week. Steel common held around its high, Baldwin rose sharply and marked strength was displayed in Corn Products, Standard Oil of California, American Sugar, Mallinson, Mariand Oil and American Wool.

The further huge expansion—nearly 7,000,000,000 marks—record in the last German bank statements, tells the story of the renewed collapse of the mark even more than the failure to agree on German reparations. For the moment, however, the decline was arrested today. Mark exchange held around .08, as against Friday's low of .07¾. This helped the market for both French exchange and French Government bonds.

As a rule the high prices on the Stock Exchange were made during the remarkable demonstration in the railway shares in the first hour. But the market in the final hour took the accustomed week-end offerings without more than a trifling recession and the close was well up to the top.

The Bond Market.

The bond market today was very active and strong all around. New high records were made in many of the railway issues. This was the case in the Southern Railway 5s which crossed par for the first time, with the Lake Shore 4½s which reached 96, the Northern Pacific 5s, the Missouri Pacific 6s up to 102, the C. & O. convertible 5s at 99¾ and the Norfolk & Western convertible 6s which gained over a point. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph 5s also made a new high for the year at 99⅞. The investment demand was very much in evidence in the foreign government section. Argentine 5s rose a point to 88 and the City of Berne 8s a point to 114. Advances of a half to three-quarters of a point occurred in Denmark 8s, City of Zurich 8s and City of Christiania 8s. Paris, Lyons and Mediterranean 6s were up a half point to 78.

The market for Canadian Provincial bonds this week showed decided firmness and a better demand appeared for most issues at slightly higher prices.

Rails the Leaders.

Railway stocks on the previous days had been neglected in favor of industrials. Today this condition was precisely reversed. Once the buying movement got into the rails it produced some remarkable results. The same scarcity of offerings that has been repeatedly demonstrated in the many tests which the rail share market has had during the last six weeks of strikes was disclosed. Advances of a point or 2 points were brought about in the space of a few minutes and with the purchase of only a few thousand shares, Union Pacific, opening at 147½, jumped to 149¼, then on transactions of several hundred shares rushed up to 150. Atchison was one of the leaders, getting across 104 for the first time, and new high records were made in Southern Pacific, A. C. L., Northern Pacific, Norfolk & Western, Baltimore and Ohio, New York Central and the St. Pauls. The road named were very strong on the resumption of what were regarded by some as pool operations. Going through its previous top of 62, Southern Railway preferred pushed briskly.

Financial Notes.

The New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad net operating income report for the first six months indicates earnings for the year on all three classes of stock—amounting to $30,000,000—will be about $6,632,641, or 22.11 per cent. The regular dividend paid for the last three years on the three classes of stock is 5 per cent, after which all classes share equally. The net operating income for the first half year was $3,412,248, as against $2,016,933 for the same period last year.

The Galena Signal Oil Co. declared its regular quarterly 2 per cent dividend on old and new preferred stocks, payable Sept. 30 to stock of record Aug. 31.

WHEAT BREAKS TO NEW LOW LEVEL AT CLOSE OF WEEK

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Acute depressions of wheat prices during the past week, extending at times under $1.00 a bushel, closely followed breakdown of the interallied conference at London. Failure of the allied premiers to reach any agreement in regard to German financial affairs caught the wheat market when the domestic industrial outlook appeared uncertain, the rail strike settlement in particular, and buying power seemed to be restricted almost entirely to traders who had been on the selling side of the market and were in position to profit. Subsequently, with coal mines reopening and with railroad troubles less threatening, the wheat market rallied somewhat, buyers apparently becoming more confident.

Reports of drouth and heat damaging corn led afterward to a sharp upturn in the price of wheat as well as of other cereals, but wheat fell in value again when timely moisture and cooler temperature relieved anxiety as to corn. At this juncture, too prospective increased receipts of wheat as a result of expected settlement of the rail strike became a noticeable bearish factor, heightened in effect through talk, to effect that the spring wheat crop was made and would soon be moving in volume.

Weather conditions ruled the corn market. Despite rains and cooler weather, sentiment remained bullish, the extent of actual damage by drouth being a question.

Provisions were governed mostly by changes in the value of hogs.

Grain prices closed lower at the week-end session on the St. Louis Merchants' Exchange.

In the local cash grain market Saturday choice soft wheat was scarce and wanted. The demand for the average run of receipts was rather slow. Prices were unchanged to 2c lower, with a fair clearance finally. Shippers with mill orders and local mills were the chief buyers. Hard wheat was 2c to 3c lower on the various grades of yellow, with inside prices prevailing late in the day. The demand was only fair. There was a little milling inquiry for strong dark Western varieties. The corn market was a draggy affair. Prices were sharply lower, declines ranging from ½c to 2c. Between 30 and 40 cars were carried over. White corn was cleaned up pretty well to shippers, but there was only a very limited sale of yellow to mills and hardly any demand at all for mixed. Cash oats were ½c to 1c lower, but met pretty good demand at the full decline. Locals and shippers were the chief buyers.

Prices generally were under previous close in the fore part of the day. The action of Liverpool, which closed 1⅝d to 2⅛d lower, and report of benefit to corn by rain were factors in the market.

September wheat opened at 98⅝c, December wheat 99½c, May wheat $1.05, September corn 58c, December corn 51⅝c and May corn 55½c.

The three Northwestern markets combined Saturday had 472 cars of wheat, compared with 206 a week ago and 610 last year. Minneapolis receiving 287 cars, Duluth 47 and Winnipeg 138.

Primary receipts of wheat today were lighter than a week ago and lighter than a year ago, being 1677 bu. Corn receipts today were heavier than a week ago and lighter than a year ago, being 715,000 bu. Oats receipts, which were heavier than a week ago and lighter than a year ago, being 967,000 bu.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Wheat broke to new low levels on the crop today. The feature of the trade was the hedging pressure coming from the Northwest, principally Winnipeg, and these hedges were placed in May wheat. At the start there was further commission house liquidation which encouraged short sales by the locals. Good support developed after a moderate break, but the hedging pressure mentioned above turned the tide in favor of the bears. There was a further decline in cables and with foreign exchange showing an easier trend export business was hard to put through. It was said that Southwest advices report country elevators and side tracks contain grain which will move as soon as the strike is settled. Argentine new wheat crop acreage is estimated at 12 per cent larger than a year ago. A local crop expert, after a tour over Canada, estimates the crop at 327,000,000 bushels, or 60,000,000 bushels above the recent official estimate. Market closed ¼c to 1⅛c lower; September 99⅝c to 99¼c; December $1.00⅛@1.01; May $1.06@1.06⅛.

Corn suffered further declines. Buying power is gone with the breaking up of the hot wave. Liquidation was on and the only support came from shorts. Cash demand for corn was not so brisk and premiums were shaded half. Country offerings to arrive were light because of the decline. Market was ¼c to ⅛c lower; September 59⅛c; December 53⅝@53½c; May 56⅞c.

Oats followed the lead of other grains. Trade was without feature. Shipping sales were of good volume. Market closed unchanged to ⅛c lower; September 30½c; December 33@33⅛c; May 35⅝c.

Provisions were lower. Heavy selling of lard by longs because of the break in grain and hogs was a factor. Lard closed 2½c to 5c lower, and ribs unchanged to 5c lower.

Sheep—Receipts, 1500; strong native lambs mostly $12.50@12.75; top, $12.75; none strictly choice; culls mostly $9; compared week ago, killing lambs 25c to 50c higher; natives mostly 50c up; matured wethers weak; yearlings, feeding and breeding stock strong to 25c higher.

Favorable Trade Balance Cut.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—A reduction of more than $90,000,000 in the nation's favorable trade balance during July, as compared with a year ago, will help the International exchange situation, the Commerce Department declared today in a statement making public the results of the country's foreign trade for the month.

Substantially increased gold imports, but slightly decreased commodity exports and imports, the department stated, characterized the foreign trade of the country for July as compared with June. The decided reduction in the favorable trade balance from $147,000,000 a year ago, $54,000,000 for July, the department declared to be a healthy sign, pointing to a gradual return to more normal relations between our exports and imports, which is bound to have a beneficial effect on the international exchange situation.

Commodity exports for July aggregated $305,000,000, against $334,000,000 in June and $325,000,000 in July, 1921, while imports totaled $251,000,000 against $260,000,000 in June and $178,000,000 for July a year ago.

CATTLE AND LAMB PRICES ARE HIGHER

Lighter Receipts Basis of Upturn—Hog Supplies Liberal, Prices Off.

COMPARATIVE RECEIPTS.

	Last Week.	Prev. Week.	Year Ago.
Cattle and calves	30,492	40,526	26,404
Hogs	56,596	55,934	41,526
Sheep	14,180	25,217	15,375
Totals	101,268	121,676	83,305

Influenced by lighter receipts cattle and lamb markets ruled higher at the St. Louis National Stock Yards during the week just closed, values for these classes thus recovering a good part of the loss suffered during the preceding week. Hogs, on the other hand, were again in liberal supply and prices continued on the toboggan. The cattle and calf run for the six-day period at approximately 30,500 head, was smaller by 10,000 than that for the preceding week. Receipts included approximately 130 cars of Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas grass steers. Most classes of beef steers, butcher yearlings and best cows advanced 25c to 50c for the period, with beef and bologna bulls, medium and common cows, stocker and feeder steers and canner and cuter cows varying from steady to 25c higher. Native arrivals included a good supply of well-finished steers and yearlings. A car of prime steers and heifers sold Thursday at $10.75 per cwt, or the highest for this class of stock since 1920. Numerous lots of steers and yearlings of various weights moved from $10 to $10.25, and the bulk of all native killing steers cashed from $8 to $10. Oklahoma grass steers rashed largely from $5.25 to $7.50, aKnsas $6.25 and Texas offerings (quarantine), $4.25 to $6.45. A large portion of the yearling supply comprised medium and common grass stock that sold from $5.75 to $8.50. Butcher cows at the close were selling largely from $4 to $5.75, cutter cows $2.75 to $3.50, canner cows $2.25 to $2.50, beef bulls $4 to $4.75, bologna bulls $3.25 to $4, canner bulls $2.50 to $3. Shipments of stocker and feeder cattle from these yards were the largest in many months. Values were 25c higher the forepart of the week, but demand fell off suddenly Friday and selling that day was largely lower. Values during the week varied largely from $4 to $7.25.

From a top of $10.50 Monday, veal calves advanced to a high mark of $12.25 midweek. Slight reaction set in Friday, good lights that day selling mainly around $11.50. Plain heavy calves during the week sold largely from $5 to $7, Southern canner yearlings $2.65 to $2.75.

Hog Prices Decline.

Generous midsummer receipts had a telling effect on the market for hogs during the week just closed. The six-day supply aggregated 56,600 head, which was practically the same as the offering the preceding week, but an increase of 35 per cent as compared with the corresponding period a year ago. The ample offerings from day to day made buyers bearish, and after the opening Tuesday they had a pretty tight rein on the market. For the week prices are generally 40c to 60c lower, nearly all classes sharing in the break. At the close the market is at the lowest level it has reached since the opening of February, 1922. Monday was the week's high day with a $10.35 top. Quality of the offering was fairly good, taken as a whole, and the proportion of strong weight hogs was fully up to or above the summer average, this indicating that the country is not unduly exercised over recent breaks, else they would sacrifice more immature stock. Eastern orders have been quite limited in volume since the middle of the week, leaving less competition for packers and city butchers. Rough packer sows and stags showed less decline for the week than any other class, dropping not to exceed 25c. At the week's finish, choice lights, 140 to 170 pounds, cleared at $9.25 to $9.40; desirable butchers, 180 to 200 pounds, $9.25 to $9.35; 220 to 240 pound hogs, $9.15 to $9.25; 250 to 270 pound hogs, $9 to $9.10; pigs, 120 to 140 pounds, $9 to $9.25; pigs, 100 to 120 pounds, $8.50 to $9; peewee pigs, 50 to 70 pounds, $7 to $7.75; packer sows, $6.75 to $7.25; packer stags, $5 to $6; thoroughly immunized stock pigs, 100 to 110 pounds, quoted at $10 to $10.50.

Moderate Lamb Receipts.

Only a moderate number of sheep and lambs arrived, the total number received being in the neighborhood of 13,500 head against 25,217 head received the previous week. It is but natural that the number received from now on will not be as large as the number received during the past three months as a good share of the lambs have already been sent to market. Lambs were on the advance the greater part of the week and the top reached $12.35 against a top the previous week of but $11.75. Most of the good lambs during the week brought $12 and better, while the fair to medium grades sold mainly at $11.25@11.75, with some poor quality offerings at $9.50@10.50, best culls, $5@6; common little trashy kinds, $3.50@4.50. The only change in the market during the week on sheep was that breeding ewes suffered a loss of 50c. Best light to handy weight mutton sheep sold at $6 as a rule, plain and heavy ewes $3@4, breeding ewes $6.50@7, stockers $4@5.50, choppers and bucks $2@3, canners 50c@$1.

Horse and mule receipts showed a good increase, the six-day supply totaling more than 1500 head, approximately 1200 of which were on commission. Both native and Western stock were included in the run and average values were steady in virtually all departments. The South offered outlet for most of the week's consignments, although a few Eastern interests were also in the field. Green horses of all kinds continue to find poor sale. Quality of the Western horses was not so good for this reason average values were not high. Quality considered, however, prices were about in line with those of the previous sale. There were more mules offered out of first hands than in some time previous, although demand was about equal to the supply. Best inquiry was for cotton mules, miners and good big rugged work stock.

New Orleans Cotton Market.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 19.—In the last hour of the session the market was stronger and more active than ever and toward the close prices were about $5 a bale up. The demand for contracts was increased greatly by reports from New York that 200,000 pieces of print cloths and sheetings had been sold there in the last 48 hours, and by rumors that a prominent cotton firm was out with a condition report of 58.0 per cent of normal and indicated crop figures of only 9,600,000 bales. Toward the end [illegible] 99 to 105 points over the close of yesterday and last prices were 89 to [illegible] vanced to 22.30c and closed at 22.15c.

COTTON MARKET ENDS WEEK WITH ADVANCE

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Yesterday's sharp reactions were followed by an advance into new high ground for the movement, with cotton for December delivery selling at 22.45c today. This made an advance of 82 points from the closing price of yesterday, and the general market closed strong at a net advance of 63 to 77 points.

People who had sold yesterday afternoon on private reports of rains in Texas were buyers this morning on indications that there had been nothing more than a few light showers in the Southwest. The market opened firm at a decline of four points for October but generally unchanged to 18 points higher and showed increasing firmness right after the call on increasing fear of falling crop prospects combined with a belief that the labor situation is gradually clearing and that the advance in raw material is promoting a more active demand for cotton goods.

There was considerable realizing for over the weed-end which caused some irregularity during the middle of the morning, but such sales were absorbed on very moderate reactions, and the late forenoon market was strong on a continuation of general buying. October sold up to 22.47c and January to 22.25c, with active months generally showing net advances of 60 to 83 points and closing within a few points of the best.

Reports from the goods market indicated an increased business, sales of print cloths in Fall River for the week estimated at 120,000 pieces, or about double the business of the previous week, and reports received here from the West indicated expectations of a good business if labor disputes were fully settled.

The main factor on the advance, however, according to local brokers, was the continued complaint of crop deterioration and a tendency to further scale down ideas as to the probable showing of end-August crop reports. There were rumors of very low private condition figures which probably contributed to the late advance, although they lacked confirmation.

Famous Passion Play Seen From Viewpoint of Drama and Music

Length of Some Scenes Impairs Effect, and Music Is Poor, but Acting Is Sincere and in Some Cases Able.

By Deems Taylor,
Music Critic of the New York World.

OBERAMMERGAU, July 19.

EVEN the Bible has had to submit to the Higher Criticism. A thousand years ago the theologians decided that portions of the Scriptures must be spurious, because they were not consistent with the theologians' conception of what they should be, and pastors still get into hot water with their superiors by questioning the scientific accuracy of the Creation. So why may one not criticise the Passion Play? If it were a purely religious ceremony, criticism of any kind would be bad taste. But if the Passion Play were a purely religious ceremony the American Express Co. would not be selling tickets to it; there would not be a Passion Play department in the railroad ticket offices at Munich; there would be no reserved seats at 100 marks each, and the spectators would not sit surrounded by "No Smoking" and "Photographing Forbidden" signs.

The Passion Play as it is given today, however reverently, is a dramatic pageant as well as a religious one. It could not be otherwise. When the people of Oberammergau took a vow, in the year 1633, to celebrate their miraculous delivery from the plague by giving, every 10 years, a dramatic representation of the trial and death of Jesus of Nazareth, they were not contemplating any such production as the people of Oberammergau offer today. At the first performances, during that summer of 1634, there could not have been many spectators; there was little or no scenery, and the text, one imagines, was confined pretty strictly to the chronicle given in the four Gospels. This summer the cast and chorus of the Passion Play number nearly a thousand people. There are 31 scheduled performances, each one attended by an audience of 4000, and the rush of would-be spectators has been so great that an extra performance has had to be given almost every week.

Under the circumstances, it would be hypocrisy to pretend that the play remains a purely religious occasion. There must be a fixed admission charge, for the huge auditorium must be kept in repair, and the elaborate and expensive costumes and scenery must be paid for. The 4000 must be housed and fed, and their hosts must be recompensed for their hospitality. Furthermore, 400 people might be kept under the spell of a religious ceremony for eight hours; but 4000 cannot. There must be something else to grip them, to stir their imagination, to make them forget cramped legs and weary backs—and their neighbors; in other words, the art of the theater.

AND it is in the art of the theater that the Passion Play fails. The story itself is flawless—perhaps the noblest and most poignant tragedy of all times. But much of the play is a bore, and in being so exemplifies again one of the fundamental canons of art; that the artist's chief duty is, first, to have something to say, and, second, to say it and stop. The trouble with the Passion Play is that while Mathew, Mark, Luke and John set down the story, the Rev. Joseph Alois Daisenberger dramatized it. The original four authors were wise. They set down what they had seen, as accurately and dispassionately as they could. But Dr. Daisenberger was not content with what they had done. He does not seem to have had much faith in either the imagination or the ethical perceptions of his audiences. He took sides, first of all. Conceiving the Pharisees as simple villains, he wrote in long conspiracy scenes for them in which they plot against Jesus with a frank and naive scoundrelism such as exists only in the movies. He had ideas about the life of Christ, and about the meaning of the Old Testament chronicles, and he aired them in a series of choruses and interludes longer than the play itself. He

Vera Gordon and Comedy Acts for Orpheum Opening

NEXT Sunday afternoon, Aug. 27, will open the sixth season of the Orpheum Theater, whose management has decided that Labor day, formerly the opening time, is too far away to wait for.

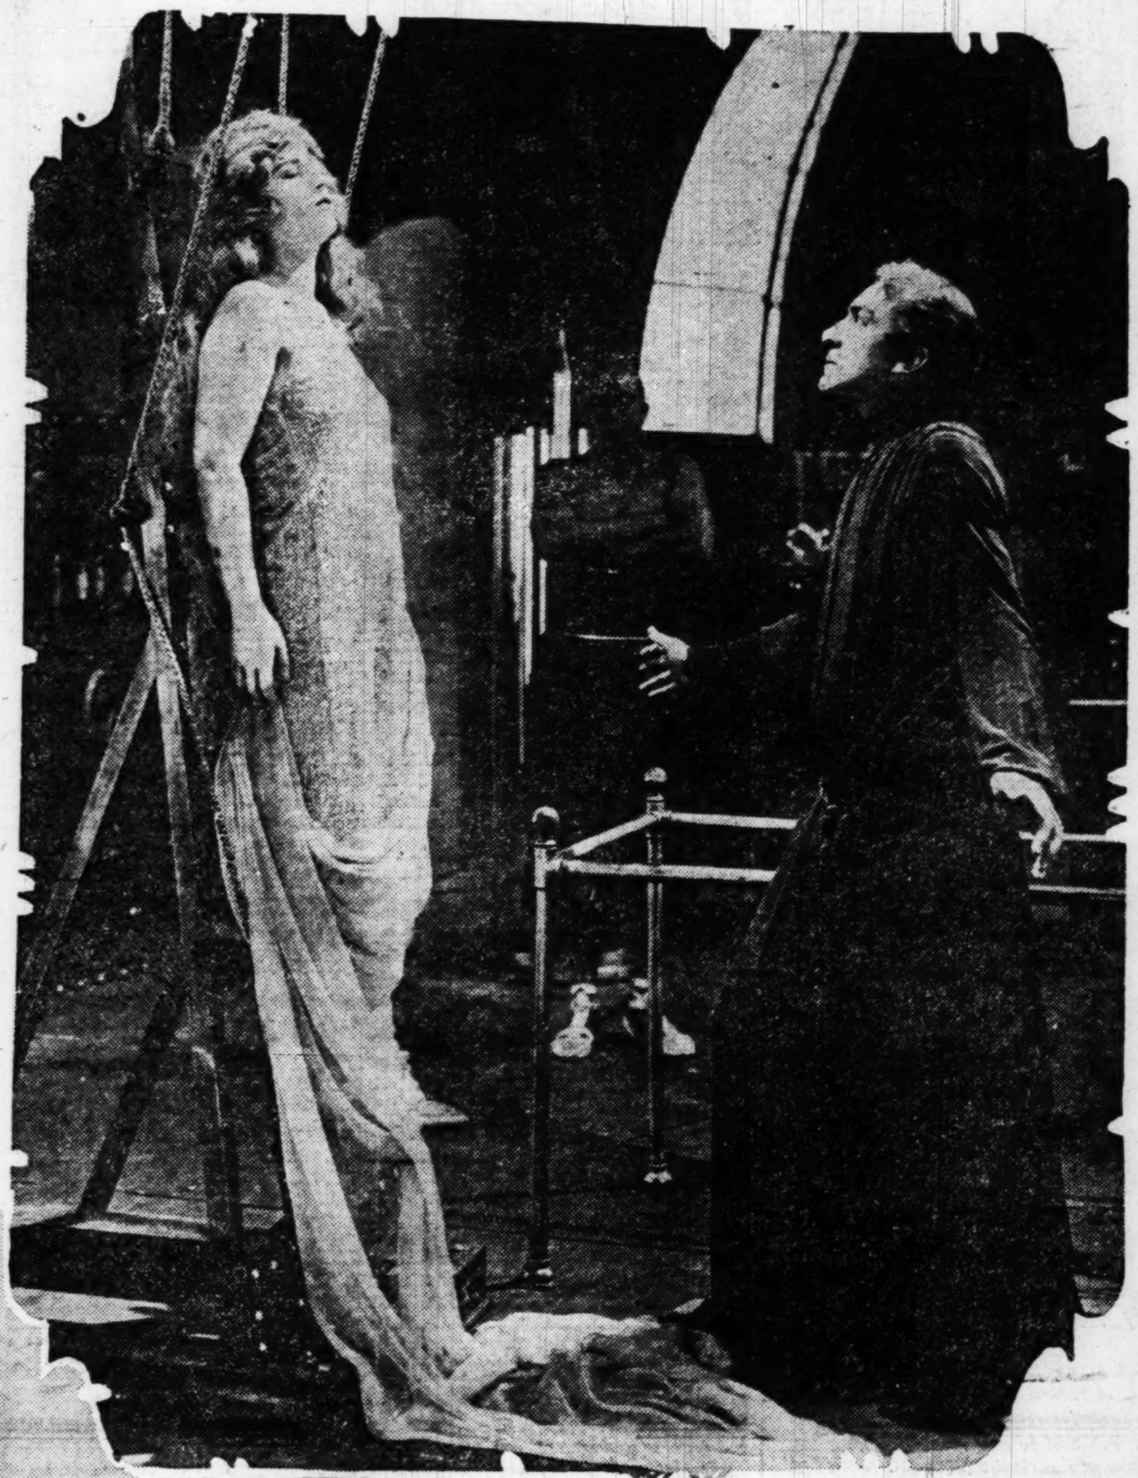
Conroy and Le Mair, blackface funmakers, will present "The Sharpshooters," one portraying the sophisticated city negro, while the other sticks to the plantation type.

Vera Gordon, one-time mother in the film "Humoresque," will appear in "Lullaby," a playlet of smiles and heart throbs. George Le Maire, musical comedy entertainer, will extract laughs painlessly with his sketch, "At the Dentist's." The remainder of the program includes Jean Granese, singer; Mons. Adolphus and three colleagues in "Bohemian Life;" Eunice Presser, violinist, and Jack La Viere.

Today's new bill at the Grand Opera House will comprise nine acts, including the Riding Davenports, Murray Voelk in "Who Is He?" and Stuart and Lawrence in impersonations.

Glenn Eastman and Lulu Moore, headliners at the Columbia Theater for the first part of this week, are offering a department store skit. Other stage acts and a film feature are presented.

The wettest picture Bert Lytell ever appeared in is "To Have and to Hold." First he had to dive four times into the open sea from the deck of a seventeenth century pirate ship. Then, in order to get close-ups, he had to duck under water 26 times in one day. "And," observes Belt, "the clothes they wore in 1620 were never intended for bathing suits."



Marion Davies and Pedro de Cordoba, in "The Young Diana"—Missouri Theater.

"The Masquerader" and "Young Diana" Are Film Features

A NOTABLE event of the current week in the local motion picture fields is the presentation of "The Masquerader" with Guy Bates Post, the star who made this play famous through six consecutive seasons on the speaking stage. The screen version was produced by Richard Walton Tully, who produced the play. It is the feature at the New Grand Central, West End Iyric and Capitol.

The story is that of wealthy, but dissolute member of Parliament, who changes places with a poor but ambitious newspaper writer. This is made possible by the fact that the men are physical doubles. Post, of course, plays both parts. One of the points of criticism against the stage play was that in several of the scenes, where it was necessary for both John Chilcote and John Loder to appear, one of the parts was taken by an actor who bore little resemblance to Post. In the picture this is obviated by double exposure, so that Post, throughout the action, plays the dual role with full effect.

Loder's impersonation of Chilcote fools everyone except Chilcote's wife and another woman. There are several dramatic situations arising from the opposing interests of these women.

Action and close-up pictures of the St. Louis Browns baseball team also will be featured all week at these three theaters.

The leading picture attraction at the Missouri Theater is Marion Davies in "The Young Diana."

The story deals with a young woman whose father seeks to marry her into the British nobility. She loves Richard Cleeve, a sailor, and Dr. Dimitrius, a scientist, falls in love with her. By a strange combination of circumstances Diana comes to believe that her sweetheart has been false to her by eloping with Lady Anne, and she swoons. Twenty years later she is seen as a spinster, and, her life embittered, she goes to Switzerland, in answer to an advertisement calling for a woman who is willing to risk her life for the sake of science. In the advertiser Diana recognizes Dimitrius. He restores her youth and beauty, and she becomes the rage of Europe. Diana meets Cleeve, who is married. He wishes to desert his wife for her, but she spurns him. Dimitrius, too, wishes to marry her. Diana falls into a faint. Then she awakens, learns she has been dreaming, and is still young and lovely without the need of rejuvenation. All is explained, and the picture fades out with the wedding of Diana and Cleeve.

The Missouri bill also includes the showing of pictures of the Browns in action and a stage feature entitled "Bits of Broadway," in which the theater's ushers will have a song number.

What They Are Doing in the Movie Studios

George Fawcett is doing two Paramount pictures at one time. He is playing Eph Holbrook in "The Old Homestead" directed by James Cruze, and the judge in "Manslaughter" a Cecil B. DeMille production. In the latter he is innocent of facial adornment; in the former he wears whiskers that are a lot of bother. "I've been doing some quick changes of late," says Mr. Fawcett, "that would do credit to a protean artist. Talk about quick shaves—I rip off the beard and comb my hair, whisk into the judicial robes and there you are. Later I doff the judge's mantle, haul out the spirit gum and back go the whiskers."

Sidney Dean, who worked in the first picture Cecil B. DeMille made on the coast, "The Squaw Man," has been added to the cast of Alice Brady's first Paramount picture, "Missing Millions" which is now in production at the company's Long Island studio.

Henry Hull, leading man in "The Cat and the Canary," has written a play in collaboration with Leighton Camun, entitled "Manhattan." It will be produced at Asbury Park in July * * * Florenz Ziegfeld has sailed for Europe, for the first time deserting his "Follies" during its initial month. He will look for new shows, take in the London production of his "Sally," and arrange for

Seeing Things at Night

By HEYWOOD BROUN,
Dramatic Editor of the New York World.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.

PROBABLY every one of us, when small, has had a lot of fun in creeping up behind a person and sudenly shouting "Booh!" It is curious to find the practice persisting into adult life, and it is still more curious that people should pay for the privilege of being frightened. Crane Wilbur, the author of "The Monster," may have come by his notion through observation in amusement parks. There he could see people crowding to get into devices which turn them heels-overhead, joggle them, twist them, break their spines, and in other ways annoy them. "The Monster" belongs to this school of entertainment. It is a drama of discombort.

Of course, "The Monster" may fail to terrify you, but that will hardly be the fault of Crane Wilbur. He has tried his best to create situations too horrible for human endurance. Indeed, gleeful reports came from the press department of the attraction, while it was still on the road, that fainting women were being carried out from every performance. New York is either more shrewd or more heartless. At any rate, nobody fainted at the first night on Broadway. Two critics left before the play had ended, but it is not likely that they were overcome. Perhaps they never forgot that it was just a play. On the other hand, a well known ingenue, sitting in an equally well known restaurant immediately after the performance of "The Monster," declared publicly that she was much too frightened to go home alone.

One of the things which mitigates against the play's frightening anybody much except ingenues, is the fact that Mr. Wilbur has not been content to try his luck with just one, big, sudden "Booh!" He keeps saying it throughout three acts. After a time, mankind can be bored even out of terror.

The chief character in "The Monster" is a scientific lunatic, a medical man gone mad. To his lonely house, through strange devices, he lures travelers by night. Once inside, they are trapped. Beds fold up and smother people, and couches sink through the floor into the doctor's subterranean laboratory. This is his chamber of horrors. The producers call the play a "merry thriller," but that is asking a good deal of your sense of humor. In the last act, for instance, we find the hero strapped into a model of the electric chair, while the heroine is tied to an operating table. The mad Ziska stands over her with a complete set of scalpels, including a niblick. Fortunately, the poor girl is unconscious at the moment, having been drugged with opium. But the hero knows what is going on, and Ziska also tells him what is about to happen. He intends, he says, to vivisect the young lady. After that he purposes to electrocute the young man in an effort to see whether it will not be possible to bring him back to life again. However, he happens to wander away for a moment, and a hideously deformed character slips into the room and liberates the hero, who catches the doctor and straps him into his own electric chair and everything ends happily.

Now, a playgoer is in a peculiar predicament when he confronts a scene of that kind. If the illusion is good enough to convince him for the moment that real things are happening, he will inevitably have a horrible time. If he doesn't believe he will be bored and irritated at the tedious, trumpery mechanics of the effort. We were among the unbelievers. Partly, perhaps, because we did not want to believe.

The newspaper reviewer is often accused of being too jaded for the good of the theater, but this is an error which he needs, to enable him to repeal with sufficient contempt the attempt to place the drama on the level of putting a spider down a little girl's neck.

The Girl and the Gob.

CERTAINLY there can be no complaint against the easy charm of the new Belasco production which is called "Shore Leave." Once again the old Squire has turned out the loyal peasantry. But although "Shore Leave" is pretty consistently sweet, a little of it is true. The first act is genuine light comedy of a high order. The rest of the manuscript is probably no more than a variation from pretty good to no good at all, but it is at such points that Belasco has come to the rescue of Hubert Osborne's comedy. When the characters have nothing in particular to say Belasco rushes around backstage and introduces the sound of surf. If you don't care much for the conversation, it is soothing to listen to the waves. Indeed, it seemed to us, that Belasco had rather improved the ocean. We do not remember ever having encountered a swish quite so regular in rythm or so musical in sound. In the real sea there comes a wave every now and then which proves a dud. Mr. Belasco's ocean is much too well rehearsed for anything like that.

Hubert Osborne has also made a good deal of use of the Atlantic. His is a sea more gentle and considerate than that which rages through the drama of O'Neill. So much sugar and cream has been added that one can hardly detect the salt. But there is also a dash of lemon. The humor of "Shore Leave" is genuine and often keen.

The two major characters are well drawn and exceptionally well played. The story concerns a lonely little seaside seamstress and a visiting gob from the United States navy. Frances Starr is the young woman who does plain and plaintive mending. She is far less plaintive than has become her lot in the theater during the last few seasons. The rainfall is much diminished. Even when she is obliged to weep "Shore Leave" permits Miss Starr to cry for comic effect. Until we saw Frances Starr in this play it was our notion that there was no actress in America except Laura Hope Crewes who could achieve merriment by dabbing her nose with a handkerchief.

"Shore Leave" proves that most of us had forgotten how excellent is the capacity of Frances Starr for light comedy. She has a true soubrettish verve and vigor in her best and happiest moments. The pinched quality which seemed to be creeping in a few seasons ago is gone. There is true mischief and twinkle in the young woman.

For the role of the gob, Belasco

TOWN OF 15,000 INHABITANTS MOVED TO MAKE WAY FOR MINE

By the Associated Press.

HIBBING, Minn., Aug. 19.—Moving of this village of 15,000 inhabitants, considered by engineers to be one of the great achievements of the twentieth century, virtually is completed. Now, where the world's richest village formerly was located there stands a few old buildings, the tract being dotted with the crumbled foundations of the removed structures.

On the other hand, where once lay a sightless, bush covered tract of land there now stands the town of new Hibbing, the metropolis of the most valuable ore mining center in the world. Entire houses which formerly stood on the old townsite now are a part of the new Hibbing, having been removed in sections upon huge motor trucks.

Hibbing's new business quarter is one of the bright spots of the mining country. Large office and store buildings line the main thoroughfares. Construction of the new structures was planned by the best architects in the country and there is a uniformity in this feature which gives the richest village a fine appearance.

Within the space of a very few years, the Oliver Iron Mining Co., which purchased the surface rights to the old townsite for $2,500,000 will begin work of stripping the earth to gain access to the rich ore beds which are estimated to be worth in the neighborhood of $50,000,000. There is a great deal of litigation pending over the taking over of the old townsite, but it is considered simply a matter of time until the last obstacle preventing ripping open of old Hibbing has been removed, permitting digging of the much sought for mineral.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

Few People Know How Useful It Is In Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, and after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being sweetened to be smooth and palatable.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

Many physicians advise Staurt's Charcoal Lozenges to patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat. Charcoal is also believed to greatly benefit the liver. These lozenges cost but thirty cents a box at drug stores, and you get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

Cocoanut Oil Makes a Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless) is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply put two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a cup or glass with a little warm water, then moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at any drug store. It is very cheap and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.

was a well-loved and long-lived man (he was born in 1799 and lived till 1883), and he was unquestionably a good and tremendously devout man; but he was neither a poet nor a dramatist, and he spoiled the Passion Play.

THE performance begins at 8 o'clock in the morning, runs without intermission until noon, resumes again at 2 in the afternoon and finishes at 6, the action beginning with the entry into Jerusalem and ending with the resurrection. There is a prelude, spoken and sung, and a long choral epilogue, concluding with a tableau showing Christ in heaven. The story is divided into 17 sections, and before every one of them the modern author has written a spoken and choral prologue that takes from 10 to 23 minutes, every prologue, besides, including a tableau showing some scene from the Old Testament that is alleged to be a foreshadowing of the incident about to take place. In other words, the Rev. Dr. Daisenberger not only has the players enact what takes place, but tells the audience at great length what is about to take place, just before it happens, pointing out incidentally that it was all foretold in the Old Testament—as when, for instance, he offers the divorce of Vashti by Ahasuerus as a prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem.

The result is that what should take at the utmost four hours takes eight. The interludes would not be so bad if the music and the singing were superlatively good. The singing is mediocre and the music is superlatively bad. The chorus is excellently trained, but the voices are hard and shrill and show a distressing tendency to flat. The best singing was done by an anonymous young tenor soloist, who has a voice of real beauty and some knowledge of how to use it. The bass soloist has a good voice, but knows nothing about singing. The original music to the Passion Play was lost in a fire in 1817, and the present score was written to replace it by Rochus Dedler, who was the schoolmaster at Oberammergau during the second decade of the nineteenth century. Schoolmaster Dedler was a hard worker, and had obviously heard a lot of Mozart and a little Gluck; but he was anything but a composer, and his score makes very dreary hearing.

IN short, the marvelous drama chronicled in the four Gospels is obscured and robbed of much of its impressiveness by the pious but tedious efforts of the village intellectuals to improve upon it. The entry into Jerusalem is a colorful and impressive picture, but it is spoiled by the dreadful Moody and Sankey hymn with which the rejoicing populace welcomes the Savior. Many of the least important episodes—such as the plotting of the Pharisees—are the longest. The Last Supper, obviously staged after Da Vinci's painting, drags on interminably by reason of a silent foot-washing ceremony that devotes a good minute and a half to every one of the 12 apostles. The crucifixion loses its gripping power by being just 15 minutes too long. In this scene are the dying words of Jesus of Nazareth—the Seven Last Words; yet they go almost unheard in the irritating and senseless gabble of the Pharisees squabbling over Pilate's mocking legend, of the soldiers throwing dice for the garments. The scene lacks dignity and concentration. Human nerves cannot stay taut through 20 minutes of irrelevant talk. The pity and awe of the scene fade. One begins to notice one's neighbors—the three Berliners who came down in a Rolls-Royce, the stout woman in back who is eating something done up in crackly paper—to read the signs, to wonder what sort of harness Anton Lang has on under that flesh-colored jersey. It is a pity.

THE production is too elaborate to be excused for its crudities and too unimaginative to be impressive. The costumes are the best, well cut and worn, and splendid in color; but the scenery! There is a good deal of it, for there are separate sets for all the tableaux and many of the Passion scenes, and it looks exactly like the lithographed cards of Bible stories that one used to get at Sunday school, except that the cards were better lighted, didn't wrinkle and could be thrown away. There are, of course, no artificial lights on the stage at Oberammergau, and one realizes as never before just how much good stage lighting does toward enhancing the effectiveness of scenery and concentrating attention upon the right spot.

THE acting is surprisingly good for an amateur product, and not quite good enough to be worthy of the Passion Play. No actors could be more terribly in earnest than these Oberammergau players, but many actors could be more impressive. Their very devotion is their undoing, for, significantly enough, the best and most effective acting is done by those who portray the secular and wicked characters—Paula Rendl as Mary Magdelene, Hugo Rutz as Caiphus, Hans Mayr as Pilate, and, above all, Guido Mayr as Judas. The talents of these players may be no greater than those of the others, but they act with greater freedom and confidence. Guido Mayr in particular, a stocky red-bearded little man with a humorous eye, gives an amazing portrayal of Judas, delivering his numerous long soliloquies with never-failing force and variety at the end that many a more famous mime might envy.

The others seem overwhelmed by the theological significance of their roles. They are afraid to be men and women, speaking the lines with the sustained, singsong inflection that is so unfortunately associated with sermons. Anton Lang, as Christus, was a beautiful figure, but a disappointing actor. His portrayal of the Nazarene was, if one may say so, too reverent. The immortal speeches fell from his lips, not as things thought and spoken, but as something read from a book, something too sacred to be touched with actuality. Not that Lang gave a crude performance. His grace and dignity of bearing and his natural eloquence precluded that. But he did not attempt to impersonate, to characterize. One missed the magnetism, the proud humility, the quenchless inner fire that caused even a Roman centurion to exclaim, "Truly, this was the Son of God!" Here was a Christus from a medieval, two-dimensional, somewhat conventialized, almost impersonal, moving about among men and women of flesh and blood—unreal rather than supernatural.

OF the arrangements for handling the—for Oberammergau—enormous crowds that gather to see the play there can be nothing but praise. Everything is done by a central committee, and nothing, apparently, has been overlooked. The visitor knows, before he gets to the town, just where he is to be lodged, for the ticket he has bought entitles him, not to an admission, but to board and lodging at a specified house or inn during the period of his stay. Ticket speculation has been eliminated by the ingenious method of delivering the admission ticket direct to the landlords, who distribute them to their guests only on the morning of the performance. Nothing is left vague. Even the number and kinds of courses that shall constitute a meal are specified by the ever-vigilant committee, with an added proviso that a visitor shall be entitled to an extra helping if he asks for it.

Evidently the inhabitants of Oberammergau have taken to heart the parable of the man who fell among thieves, for although nearly every other building is a shop of some sort, the prices are moderate, exactly what they would be anywhere else in Bavaria. Anton Lang owns a pottery, and signs every piece that he makes himself. These are naturally in great demand, and he could probably get almost any price he chose to ask for them; yet his is one of the most reasonable shops in town. The rest of Bavaria rather affects to scorn Oberammergau, holding—or pretending to hold—that the Passion Play has become a purely commercial venture. There is even a current farce-comedy, "The Lord-God Carvers of Oberau," satirizing the alleged financial genius of the town's inhabitants. There is little evidence to support this view. The players receive no pay, the gate receipts must be little more than enough to pay for production and upkeep of the theater, and the profits earned from boarding the visitors, while probably fairly substantial, are surely not excessive (the charge for two nights' lodging, including five meals, admission ticket, lodging tax and tips, comes to exactly $1.88 in American money).

NO, the people of Oberammergau are still thoroughly sincere about their Passion Play. Their only fault is lack of imagination, a failure to cope with the artistic problems of their pageant as capably as they have solved the practical ones. There are moments when one realizes what the Passion Play might be, what possibilities of beauty and spiritual significance it holds. The first scene is unforgettable. The shouts of the people, the first sight of the familiar and well-beloved figure, clad in white and flaming scarlet, riding to the triumph that was to be his death—that alone is something to remember. But then come the careful, traditional acting, the conventional scenery, the bad music and, above all, the deadly interludes, and the spirit fades. It should all be like the beginning. If someone, anyone at all, would excise the interludes and cut down the long scenes; if a great actor were to train the players and Reinhardt were to handle the crowds; if the play could be given at night, with adequate lighting, with scenery by Jones or Appia, and music from Palestrina, Vittora, Bach and Cesar Franck—who knows? Perhaps Oberammergau might bring closer the clear vision of human brotherhood that was dreamed 19 centuries ago, and which we still strive—so vainly, to recapture.

BROADWAY PLAYS OF THIS SEASON IN CRITICAL VIEW

as been fortunate enough to find James Rennie. Rennie can swagger without straining at it. Indeed, he manages to be a cave man without hitting any of the scenery with his chest. He has added just enough quizzical disbelief to his interpretation of the conquering male to make the portrait humorous as well as convincing. Moreover, he is among the most graceful of our young leading men. Unlike most of them, he understands footwork. The voice of Rennie is a fearsome thing. He is among the habitually hoarse, but in this list are such well-known players as Ethel Barrymore, Elsie Janis, Bessie McCoy and Raymond Hitchcock. Somehow or other we are always profoundly moved by scenes played bronchially. Hoarse actors and actresses can make us forget that we are in a theater. The imperfection of utterance is enough to divert us from all the slick things which differentiate the drama from life. Hoarse people generally don't say useless things, because they don't get any fun out of merely listening to the sound of their own voices. Of course, an actor actually has to say whatever the playwright tells him to, but that is one of the things which it is possible to forget in the face of a finished performance.

"Shore Leave" alternates between comedy and farce. After its really excellent first act, beautifully played by Rennie and Miss Star, it is rather a disappointment to find almost a musical comedy mood in the second. It is in the first act that the little seagoing mistress meets her gob, just for a minute. He goes away and forgets. She remembers, but all she knows about him is that his name is Smith. Accordingly, upon coming into money, she gives a party on the deck of her freighter and invites all the Smiths in the American navy. This is all tolerably amusing, but only second-class. The play comes into its own again when it falls back into the hands of Rennie and Miss Starr in the last act.

Oh, yes; if anybody happens to be curious about it, the girl and the gob do marry, eventually.

the appearance of Billie Burke in the British capital next fall.

"The Girl In His Room" is Alice Calhoun's current Vitagraph release. Kirk Waring, a young explorer and hunter of big game, returns home after a long absence and finds that his door key will not fit the lock of his house. In the window of his own room on the second story a light is burning. Kirk climbs up a rain spout, looks through the curtains and sees a young and beautiful girl. Starting with this touch of mystery, the story moves swiftly towards a dramatic and startling climax.

Earle Williams will be seen in a new picture entitled "Restless Souls," which is scheduled for release at the end of May. He has the role of Jimmy Parkington, the man who pretends to be dead so that his wife may marry another man. The tangle which results from his well-meant scheme provides abundant comedy.

Harold Lloyd has made a five-reel film for Associated Exhibitors entitled "Grandma's Boy." "Though essentially a comedy," says the announcement, "the action of the picture is woven about a connected, logical plot."

"The Closed Door," a film produced by Livingston Phelps in France and the Swiss Alps, was shown recently to invited spectators by Edward L. Klein, who has charge of its distribution in this country.

There will be a Movie Players' Carnival for the benefit of the sick and benevolent fund of the Film Players' Club at Starlight Amusement Park, Bronx River and One Hundred and Seventy-seventh street, from June 5 to 10. It will be under the management of A. D. V. Storey.

The Paramount Studio in Long Island City will be reopened on June 5, it is announced, when "Missing Millions" is put into production, with Alice Brady in the leading role and Joseph Henabery directing. Jack Boyle is the author of the story on which the photoplay will be based.

The screen rights to "The Great Metropolis," a stage melodrama that had its day in 1898, have been bought by the Goldwyn Co. from the Klaw & Erlanger interests.

Morgan Wallace, who played the Marquis de Presle in D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm," has been cast by Griffith in his film version of "At the Grange," his next United Artists Production, which is now being produced.

The building of a great ship—to represent one of the vessels in which the colonists were conveyed from England to Virginia in the old days, has been a considerable task for the Lasky craftsmen. The ship is for George Fitzmaurice's production, "To have and to Hold," adapted from Mary Johnston's novel. Betty Compson and Bert Lytell are featured in cast which includes Theodore Kosloff as the heavy. The ship, as it will appear on completion after being sent from San Pedro to Balboa, will be an absolute reproduction of the stately craft of the early 17th century.

Special bronzes by Sartino Scarpitta, noted New York sculptor, will be an interesting feature of the luxurious Spanish set in "Blood and Sand," Rodolph Valentino's first starring picture for Paramount.

Claire Windsor, who plays the lead in "Brothers Under Their Skins," has been described as of "Swedish distraction" by a studio punster, who has managed thus far to evade capture by the Culver City police.

A Good Hop Flavored Malt Extract is a Wonderful Thing

If it is made out of choice malt barley it has wonderful nourishment for every use. If fresh pressed Bohemian Hops are used, it has a wonderful flavor.

But if it is adulterated with cheap corn and flavored with old, loose hops, it is of no use for any use.

So when somebody tries to sell you a Hop Flavored malt Sugar Syrup cheaper than the actual price of the barley and the hops that go into it, you can know that the choicest barley and the imported hops haven't gone into it.

Puritan Hop Flavored Malt Extract is the richest malt extract made because it is the product of the choicest barley grown and is flavored with imported Bohemian hops.

People evidently know this because there is a bigger demand for Puritan than all other malt extracts combined. So, when you are buying malt extract, be sure and ask for and demand

'HOT' NUMBER FORECAST IN MILK FUND BENEFIT

One of the diverting numbers on the vaudeville review program which members of the Fred W. Stockham Post No. 245, American Legion, will give Saturday evening, Aug. 26, at the Orpheum Theater for the benefit of the Post-Dispatch Pure Milk and Free Ice Fund will be a combined singing and dancing act by Percy Gash, Joe Heyer and Cecil Childs. These local comedians refuse to give an advance account of their sketch beyond the phrase "It's a hot one," but Hall Goodwin, stage manager of the show and Charles V. Robinson, stage manager of the Orpheum, have issued the statement that while the skit is peppery it isn't lacking in humor or local color.

Edgar C. Smith and the versatile Joe Heyer will offer a piano duet with the support of the Jazz Band, featuring several new song hits.

Manager E. J. Sullivan, of the Orpheum Theater, announces that the Pathe Weekly Feature Co. has given the use of a reel of news to be run at the opening of the show, which will be presented in regular Orpheum style.

Tickets are on sale at 1111 Olive street. Exchange tickets may be obtained from members of Stockham Post and presented at the downtown office for reserve seats, or the latter may be purchased directly.

NEW LAMP BURNS 94% AIR

Beats Electric or Gas

A new oil lamp that gives an amazingly brilliant, soft, white light, even better than gas or electricity, has been tested by the U. S. Government and 35 leading universities and found to be superior to 10 ordinary oil lamps. It burns without odor, smoke or noise—no pumping up, is simple, clean, safe. Burns 94% air and 6% common kerosene (coal-oil).

The inventor, D. G. Johnson, 609 W. Lake St., Chicago, is offering to send a lamp on 10 days' FREE trial, or even to give one FREE to the first user in each locality who will help him introduce it. Write him today for full particulars. Also ask him to explain how you can get the agency; and without experience or money make $250 to $500 per month.

The Importance of Healthy Kidneys

In removal of waste material from the body, the kidneys are called upon to perform a very important duty. The failure of these marvelous and delicately constructed organs to properly do their work means retention in the system of poisonous matter. This poisons the system, and if permitted to remain results in severe backache, headache, torpid liver, constipation and other serious ills. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Remedy, a combination of herbs and other healthful ingredients was discovered about 50 years ago, and its value in strengthening the kidneys and liver was at once appreciated. Today it stands as one of the standard remedies in the treatment of diseases of the kidneys and liver. Many persons suffer from diseases of the kidneys unknowingly. The use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Remedy will invariably improve your health, and make you feel that life is really worth the living. Sold by Wolff-Wilson Drug Co. and all leading druggists. What a Prescription Really Does for You

When you are "sick," that means that nature has been unable to "carry on" as she should. If nature has sufficient reserves she will overcome any sickness. She will work hard to kill off germs, or to overcome a waste of energy.

This tendency is what gives so-called mind cures and other fakes their working ground, even though a germ is an actual, visual fact under the microscope.

The prescription which a doctor writes for you is based upon a knowledge of what has happened to nature. The doctor knows from printed records and from personal experience that a grain of this or a dram of that will do certain things to help nature work again.

After studying you yourself, he finds that perhaps you may need a little more of this, or less of that, than ordinary. He finds what's wrong, where help is needed—and knows which drug will bring assistance.

Then we simply follow his orders—exactly.

A THREE-TIME AD COSTS LESS, PRODUCES MORE.

ST. LOUIS REALTY ACTIVE FOR THIS SEASON OF YEAR

SUBDIVISION LOTS IN BRISK DEMAND

Construction in Many Additions Going Forward; Building Conditions Over the Country.

By Berry Moore.

Transactions in realty in the city and suburbs continue to be on a liberal scale for this season of the year and are general in character. Absorption of flats, apartments and houses for investment and homes is notable, while the demand for business property and for holdings having speculative advantages is a most wholesome feature.

The inquiry is diversified and noteworthy and indicative of a broad market this fall. An unusual number of offers were submitted during the week for large holdings in the residential, intermediate sections and in the downtown district.

Real estate of all classes is on a substantial and attractive basis, owing to the cessation in construction during the war, while the cost of building material, which retarded a resumption of building for a long time afterwards, is advancing again.

This is working as a bull factor. So far as the real estate owners are concerned, the situation is reassuring to say the least.

The demand for lots in the new subdivisions continues brisk and construction of houses is going forward in many of these additions, notably in Gravois Homesites.

Princeton place, Moorlands, Normandy Park addition, University Park, Bircher Heights and Delmar Heights and Westmoor.

Car Shortage Influence.

According to the American Contractor, a national publication, fear of car shortage for building materials, slow down and cost raising of production on account of coal scarcity have operated to lessen projected planning for construction activity. The publication says:

"It is unfortunate that the construction industry, which brings employment to about 11,000,000 men, and which by its great activity so far this year in producing sorely needed shelter, has brought all business out of the doldrums and onto a firm, solid basis, should have received such a body blow. But what otherwise could be expected as a result of a coal strike allowed to hang on and on throughout the spring and summer, and a rail strike which has added confustion to already confused rail conditions brought about by an eight-year period of insufficient buying of rolling stock to make up for ordinary depletion."

The official returns from 195 cities to The American Contractor show that during July 56,332 permits were issued whose valuation was $212,314,292. Returns from the same number of cities for June gave a total estimated valuation of $251,639,839; and from the same number of cities for May gave a total of $247,192,158. Thus is shown a marked slump in July plans for building.

Cities whose average monthly valuation has exceeded $1,000,000, or whose July valuation is over $1,000,000, are recorded in the table printed at the foot of this page.

Big Drop at New York.

From this tabulation it is seen that New York City undergoes a big drop in expected valuation of projected activity, the valuation being $58,217,171 in June and $35,133,017 in July.

Chicago drops from $26,576,850 to $16,214,300. Chicago's May valuation was $27,029,650. The end of building of speculative type is seen in these figures and industrial building has not come forward in sufficient volume to fill the gap.

Los Angeles, Detroit, San Francisco, Boston, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, Kansas City and Pittsburg are among the cities showing slow down.

Gains are registered in Cleveland, Baltimore, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Washington, Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The following six cities: New Haven, Dubuque, Utica, Youngstown, Charleston and Charlotte jump from less than a million-dollar valuation in June to one million or over in July.

Considering the total number of cities reporting, there is the very appreciable gain of 35 per cent over the corresponding figures for July, 1921.

The construction industry is confronted with finding a way around car shortage and car priorities. The cost of construction is higher than it was at the beginning of the season, and so long as the voluminous amount of project valuation under way is not completed, there will continue to be shortage of skilled workmen in some crafts, particularly bricklaying and plastering.

Too much stress cannot be laid upon the monthly variations, because local influences may bunch permits in one month in one or more cities.

Averages count. The monthly average so far in 1922 has been approximately $126,000,000. The monthly average for the year 1921 was only $89,000,000, and yet 1921 was a record breaking year.

A. R. Schollmeyer reports great activity at Gravois Home Sites which he is offering on liberal terms. The addition is now more than two-thirds sold and many of the choicest sites of the flats have been resold several times, and each time at an advance, so great is the demand for lots in this addition. Building is going forward in the addition and all surface improvements, etc., are under way. The property is at 7100 South Gravois and is reached by the Cherokee car line. It is well situated for a medium priced addition, while the prices at which it is being offered are regarded as comparatively low.

SUBDIVISION PROPERTY GOES ON SALE TODAY

Lots West of Midland Boulevard in University Park Are Opened.

The Cyrus Crane Willmore Organization, Inc., with offices in the Boatmen's Bank Building, announces the opening of the property west of the Midland boulevard in University Park. The University Park subdivision is located at 7100 Delmar and is surrounded by scores of beautiful University City homes. Midland boulevard, a hundred foot boulevard, is to run through the center of this property and that part of the University Park subdivision which lies immediately west of Midland boulevard is being offered for sale today.

This property lies high and overlooks all of the property in West St. Louis, University City and Clayton. These lots are within a block of the center of University City and will be developed as high-class residential property.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS

Is needed by clients of ours to complete the purchase of a coal mine now operating in a nonunion field and which we are reliably informed is worth a million and a half dollars (probably more). We don't want you to give us any money, but want you to place, what you care to invest, in a reliable bank here (with the privilege of withdrawing the same if you see fit) until the necessary $100,000 is accumulated, and then those of you who have so deposited your money may choose any mining engineer you desire and if he doesn't tell you that your money will more than double or treble itself in one year, and continue so to do year after year for years to come, in this proposition, you can withdraw your funds and you are no money out. This proposition is absolutely on the square—you have no chance to lose and if you want to get in on it, see the undersigned between 5 and 6:30 p. m. Our client does not propose to pay a broker or capitalists an enormous brokerage charge, nor do they propose to give to some capitalist their proposition—they are willing and glad to see those in with them make a handsome profit on their money. That is why this method of procuring money is resorted to. Any man, woman or child with $100 or more can come in. S. M. BASS, of Bass & Bass, Attys., 503-4-5 Times Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

The Post-Dispatch reserves the right to reject any query. Personal and telephone calls, or answers by mail, cannot be given attention, except letters on medical questions of undoubted sincerity, when accompanied by stamped addressed envelope.

VIRGINIA.—Our advice would be to take the cat to a veterinary.

CURIOUS.—The half-dollar dated 1871 is worth 50c to 55c.

MRS. S. D. H.—A recipe for dill pickles was published in Aug. 8 issue under the name Thank You.

JUNE.—The sentence, "The contents of this envelope were mailed yesterday," is correct. The collective noun takes a plural verb.

A. F. G.—We cannot tell when your bonus will be paid. You will have to wait patiently until you hear from the Bonus Commission.

JOHN.—Inquire of the Reference Department of the Auto Club of Missouri for the route from Hillsboro, Ill., to York, Pa.

V. V. M.—A quarter dated 1853, no rays or arrows is worth $2 to $8, with rays and arrows it is worth 25c to 30c.

CARDINALS. — The whitewash should eb treated with water. If thoroughly soaped it can be easily removed by applying the scraper vigorously. We know of no acid to do this. Inquire among the paint shops.

C. G. R.—The telephone wire would have no effect upon your receiving set. However, if it is not in use it would add to the looks of your antennae if you would have it taken down. As it is the property of the telephone company, you would need their permission to do so. It is presumed that you have an outside lightning switch or arrestor. If this is the case, it would be all right.

OVERLAND.—Following is the route from Peoria, Ill., to Indianapolis, Ind.: Peoria, East Peoria, Groveland, Allentown, Mackinaw, Lilly, Danvers, to Bloomington, to Champaign, through Mayview, St. Joseph, Ogden, Oakwood to Danville, Covington, Ind., Veedersburg, through Waynetown, Crawfordsville, Mace, Jamestown, Brownsburg, through Clermont, to Indianapolis. A distance of 218.8 miles.

SUNDAY READER.—We owe the word "etiquette" to the French. It originated in the commonplace familiar warning, "Keep off the Grass." The story goes that in the reign of King Louis XIV, when the gardens of Versailles were being laid out, that the master gardner, an old Scotsman, was sorely tried because his newly seeded lawns were being continually trampled upon. To keep trespassers off, he put up warnings—etiquettes—on which was indicated the path along which to pass. The courtiers paid no attention to these directions, so the gardner complained to the King, which resulted in his majesty's issuance of an edict commanding everyone at Court to "keep within the etiquettes." Generally the term came to cover all the rules for correct demeanor and deportment in court circles. Thus through the centuries it has grown into use to describe the conventions sanctioned for the purpose of smoothing personal contacts and developing tact and good manners in social intercourse.

LEGAL INFORMATION.

(By a Member of the St. Louis Bar Association.)

J. S. P.—You can be arrested for having the liquor in your home.

A. T. K.—You do not need a license to run an office for collection of bad accounts.

M. B. X.—The person who has obtained a divorce in the State of Nevada, can marry in Colorado or Missouri immediately thereafter.

C. M.—On the case mentioned, the State could not take a change of venue to any other place or to any part of the State.

C. S.—For barber license apply to the State Board of Barber Examiners in the Granite Building, Fourth and Market streets.

F. B.—If you can prove that your mother gave the piano to you, you can probably get it by bringing a replevin suit for it.

J. E. B.—You can report the case to the Post Office Department. If you do not sue on the note within the next 3 years, it will be barred by the Statute of Limitations.

P.-D. READER.—You should pay the $7.50 as soon as you can, and ask the company to give you more time to pay the balance. They have a right to garnish your wages.

375.—1. You will have to make a return and pay the tax, as you are not living with your family. 2. You are entitled to a $1000 exemption, plus an exemption of $400 for the child, or a total exemption of $1400.

SUBSCRIBER.—You do not need a license to move cases of whisky from one residence to another, but you will need a permit from the Prohibition Enforcement Office. There is no charge for the permit.

DISTRESSED. — We have answered your question before. You can swear out a warrant against the party who stole from you. There are no charges. Go to any police station or to the Police Headquarters, to make your complaint.

J. A. D.—If the real estate was in the mother's name, and the mother left no will, the husband would receive one-half of the property and the illegitimate daughter the other one-half. The sister would not receive anything in this case.

LOUIS.—It is not necessary to have a diploma from a law school, in order to take the bar examinations. Examinations are usually held in June and December of each year. Write to Hon. Jacob D. Allen, Clerk of the Supreme Court, Jefferson City, Mo., for further information.

S. E.—If the minor wishes to have the marriage annulled, perhaps he or she can do so. Suit may be brought in the state where they reside. The cost would probably be about $50 for court costs, plus whatever fee was paid the attorney. Of course if the suit was contested the cost would be greater.

MEDICAL QUESTIONS.

Health and sanitation questions of public interest only will be considered. Diagnoses or treatment of individual cases will not be given.

MARY.—To reduce, diet, exercise and take only absolutely necessary sleep. Walking is perhaps the best exercise and may be supplemented by tennis or any other active exercise.

DESPAIR.—The condition you describe is too formidable for us to advise upon. You should be in a hospital, under the care of a competent physician. It is not likely that your condition will improve with home environments.

LOUIS.—1. The operation mentioned is not a serious one. 2. Would advise your taking 4 cholelith pills night and morning, followed by a large glass of water. Send stamped addressed envelope requesting diet list for constipation. It is most essential that regular habits be established.

Lincoln—1861 Yahlem—1922

If I told you that I resembled Lincoln in one respect you would think that I have the swelled head and that I was boiling over with idiotic conceit. But I'll have to chance that and make the statement anyhow. I do not claim that I am a second Lincoln—far from it. I have no such thought, because Lincoln was a great statesman and an international figure, while I am only a great dealer in used cars.

But we have one thing in common, and that is freedom. Lincoln freed the negro from slavery—I free my customers from the slavery of automobile grief. That's all there is to that.

You buy an automobile for the purpose of easy transportation. You don't buy it to be continually puttering around with it, or to spend your lifetime in a repair shop. The man who connects with a good-looking junkpile just begins to realize that there are more kinds of annoyance, grief, aggravation and delays than he can shake a stick at. He also must stand for a lot of just, though harsh criticism, from his family and friends for his lack of judgment in his purchase.

Lincoln made history. I am making history in my small way by establishing a record for selling griefless used cars, with written guarantees that are a pleasure to own. That's why they say, "If it comes from Yahlem it's all right." You can't get that kind of reputation merely with conversation.

Exchange Car Department

3015 Locust St.

Our Exchange Car Policy

Every car priced in plain figures at absolutely the lowest figure for which we will sell it.

It would be foolish to ignore the fact that in the past there has been some "jockeying" in the price of exchange cars, resulting to the disadvantage of the average customer.

From now on our Exchange Car Department will be positively ONE PRICE, just as our New Car Department has always been one price. Also every exchange car, unless otherwise stated, will be sold under the guarantee that it may be returned at the end of seven days if unsatisfactory and money refunded.

The Result: 1st—Every customer is guaranteed satisfaction.

2d—Every customer knows he is making his purchase at the lowest price at which he or anyone else can buy the car.

We believe ours is the finest, cleanest and lowest priced exchange car stock in the city. We believe we can offer values far better than can be found in new cars at the same prices.

MASKED MEN HOLD TRIAL OF LOUISIANA FARMER IN WOODS

Alibi Proven by Planter on Murder Charge and He is Told It Saved His Life.

By the Associated Press.

MONROE, La., Aug. 19.—Samuel Richards, a Moorehouse parish farmer, was seized by a band of 15 masked men late yesterday, carried by them into the woods and given a trial before a masked judge, 12 masked jurors, with masked prosecuting and defense attorneys on a charge of complicity in the attempted murder of Dr. B. M. McKoin, according to reports here late today. He was acquitted and returned to his home.

According to statements by Richards to parish officials, the masked men seized him while he was engaged in his farming occupations late yesterday. Upon reaching the secluded spot in the woods near his home one of the men assumed the role of judge, another was assigned to defend him, a third to act as prosecuting attorney, while the remaining 12 composed the jury.

Richards was told that his ability to prove an alibi had saved his life.

R. P. SPENCER MAY BE SHIFTED TO TAX BODY

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Aug. 19.—A quadrangular rearrangement of minor officials of the State government is in prospect, it became known today, which would result in a new Democratic State Tax Commissioner, a post which has been vacant since last November, a new secretary and a new counsel to the State Public Service Commission, and a new secretary to Gov. Hyde.

Gov. Hyde proposes to switch R. Perry Spencer of St. Louis, chief counsel to the Public Service Commission, a Democrat, to the vacant place on the tax commission, which has been without an incumbent since the State Senate refused to confirm Alfred L. McCawley of Carthage. It is not known whether Spencer has consented to this yet, as he has declined to comment on the report. Spencer, who was one of Gov. Gardner's advisers, is generally desired by members of the Hyde administration for the tax commission place. The present members of the tax commission are Roy Monier of Carrollton and George M. Hagee of St. Louis, both Republicans.

Just who is in line for Spencer's place as counsel to the Public Service Commission, the term of which will not expire until April 25, 1925, and which pays a salary of $4500 a year, is not known. A number of Republicans who feel that they had a large share in the success of the Hyde campaign for Governor have sought the place at one time or another, but the Governor has hesitated to try to remove Spencer and up to this time the latter has declined to vacate voluntarily.

The tax commissioner place, which appointment also would run until April, 1925, pays $3500 a year.

L. H. Brever of Rolla, secretary to the commission, at $3000 a year, has determined to resign, it was admitted by an administration official today. His place is to go to James P. Painter of Milan, now secretary to Gov. Hyde at salary of $2800 per year. As secretary to the Public Service Commission, Painter will serve at pleasure of the members of that body. No selection has been made yet for secretary to the Governor, the term of which will end Jan. 1, 1925.

DEATH'S BATON STILLS A GOLDEN VOICE

Operatic career of Alice Miriam, a preacher's daughter, is terminated just when fame and fortune seem assured—Her own romantic story of her youthful ambitions and disappointments and of the fairy godmother who made it possible for her to study abroad—Sang leading role with Metropolitan Opera Company on short notice last season and was to have been a principal soprano this year. :-: :-: :-: :-: :-:

ALICE MIRIAM.

NO ONE can know the whole song, wrote Goethe.

And no one may know how profusely the flowers would have bloomed for Alice Miriam if death had not so prematurely cut short her career. The silencing of her beautiful clear note when she was beginning to be heard among the other songbirds of the Metropolitan Opera cannot be thought of without pain.

Miss Miriam died in New York July 22, after an operation for appendicitis. She was 28 years old and had already given promise that seemed to insure great fame and fortune as a grand opera prima donna.

Five years ago this young American, daughter of a strolling preacher, was acclaimed in Italy as a vocal marvel. After studying in Rome and Milan she returned home and was enrolled as member, though not one of the principals of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Her first real chance came one night last season when Lucrezia Bori, cast to sing the leading soprano role in "The Snow Maiden," was taken ill suddenly with a cold. Miss Miriam was assigned to the part without rehearsals and scored a great artistic triumph. For the coming season she was to have been listed among the principals.

No one can know this singer's whole story, although the beginning of it—the first chapter—as she told it herself at a little dinner party last winter, opened most interestingly.

She was one of a family of eleven children born to a father who was a Wesleyan minister. Her real name was Alice Pinch.

"Father never saw anything funny in the name," remarked Alice, with a quiet smile, "but half the time we children did and the other half we hated it.

"I think Dad was rather proud of the fact that one of Dickens' most lovable characters bore his name.

"He was a splendid father, and while there were times in our roving life—for we rarely stayed more than two years in a place—when we children lacked almost everything, it was due to no fault of his. He preached on Sunday, but every other day he was willing to work at anything he could get to do. He would get a job on a farm, in a mill, mending a road, carpentering—anything!"

The child began to sing before she could talk, and when she had reached the age of 8 she could carry the solo part (soprano) in the village church chorus. Everybody praised her singing, but the applause of the villagers didn't turn the child's head. She knew she had to learn to sing, but she didn't know where a teacher was to be found.

"I wasn't 12 when I began to try to sing for money to help the family," said Alice. "Occasionally I earned a dollar or two singing at a funeral and once in a great while a lady of our neighborhood gave what she called a musicale and hired me.

"Then when we moved to a little place not far from Chicago I read in a paper the advertisement of a man in Milwaukee who wanted an 'entertainer' who could sing. He offered $10 a week and board.

"Without saying a word to my people, I got on the train and went up there. I wore a little calico frock and my hair hung down in two braids.

"The place was a saloon—a kind of place with a garden and a little stage. I saw the man's wife first and she liked my voice, but I didn't see the proprietor himself until night when I went on to 'entertain.'

"The guests applauded me, but at the end of my second number the saloon keeper called me into his private office and asked:

"'How old are you, little girl?'

"I told him, and he shook his head and gave me $10, with the advice to go 'right home to your ma, as this is no place for a child.'

"I took the money and followed the advice, but I was heartbroken, for it seemed to me I had been a failure."

Miss Miriam's elder sister had a voice, also, and the pair, shortly after this experience, were engaged to sing one afternoon and evening for the guests of the Battle Creek Sanitarium. Their joint fee was $25.

The children pleased so well that the director invited them to remain for a week as guests, singing or not, as they pleased.

"One day I had gone into the natatorium," said Alice, "and was rather listlessly watching the bathers, when a voice reached me from the water which said:

"'Aren't you the little Pinch girl who sang the other day?'

"When I owned it the speaker asked if she might come to my room to see me after her bath. She came and gave me a letter to a lady in Chicago, which she made me promise I would deliver personally on my way home.

"'She will hear you sing,' said my new admirer, 'and who knows what may happen?'

"What happened is like a fairy story or an incident in the wildest movie drama. The lady, who was the widow of a manufacturer of elevator machinery—she has married again—heard me sing, and within a week my mother and I were on the ocean going to France to find a teacher who would tell me how to sing.

"For five years this woman paid all our expenses, all my bills for instruction, and without a word of doubt, without a hint of discouragement. She was my fairy godmother in real earnest."

The singer paused at this point as if she had reached the end of her early history. Urged to tell a little more, she complied:

"What comes next I like to forget. I went from singing teacher to singing teacher, and with each one my voice grew darker and darker. I lost all my high notes and gained no low ones. I was in despair.

"The fifth summer mother and I just gave up and recklessly went down to Lake Maggiore in Italy to try to forget what I was going through. I thought my voice had completely gone, and the knowledge that I owed all that money to one kind, believing woman, which, without being able to sing, I could never hope to repay, almost drove me to suicide

"I kept on practicing, however, a little every day, but it was against the grain.

"One day, after my exercises in the hotel, I came down to the public room, where a gentleman accosted me:

"'Aren't you the young lady who was singing a little while ago? My dear young lady, if you pursue that method in a month more you will be voiceless.'

"Don't you suppose I know that?" I asked, angrily.

"Will you permit me to show you a better way to sing?' he said, adding: 'I am not yet a teacher and I ask no fee.'

"He gave me a lesson that day, and every day for six weeks. My improvement was marvelous. Note after note came back in my voice almost magically. Before I returned to Paris I was singing again as easily, as freely, as I used to sing when a child, but this time with art.

"How much I owe that stranger! He is now one of Italy's best-known maestros."

These simple but enthralling reminiscences were of incidents that preceded Miss Miriam's debut in Italy, where she made at once a distinct impression. They recalled her first real opportunity at the Metropolitan when that impression was deepened. For the season to come the young soprano had been promised the part of Musetta in "La Boheme" and an important role in the revival of "Rosenkavalier." But the lovely, pure coloratura is stilled and no one now can know the whole song.

A distinguished critic in Milan, after hearing her sing a difficult role, said that she was the generation's most talented Italian-educated American, which was indeed a remarkable tribute, in view of the hundreds of American girls who go to Italy every year to have their voices cultivated.

New York critics were not less enthusiastic after hearing her and some of them predicted that she would emulate, if not surpass, the great sopranos of other days.

Success did not seem to turn her head and after her return to America she continued her daily practice and study with the same ambitious spirit which actuated her when she was a beginner.

When St. Louis Browns Wo

That was 36 years ago and now the team again is knocking at the door that leads to baseball supremacy—Grand old nine won its league championship four times and captured the inter-league trophy once—Oddities of the game as played a generation ago when fielders spurned gloves, chest protectors and shinguards and were stoned when they went to rival cities. :-:

AFTER a lapse of 34 years, is baseball history about to repeat itself in St. Louis?

Will that most coveted prize of American professional sport, a major league baseball pennant, again float over Sportsman's Park, where it has not been buffeted by vagrant breezes in more than a generation? That is the question uppermost in the minds of St. Louis fans, most of whom have never seen a pennant and some of whom have only vague recollections of the last one which St. Louis could call its own, away back in 1888.

Hope deferred maketh the heart sick and the sickness of heart from this cause has been acute among baseball followers in St. Louis in those 34 years which have dragged their weary length across the records of baseball since the Browns last won a pennant.

But now it is different. The deferment of hope seems to be near its end. Old Man Gloom has stepped into the box once too often. We are hitting his fast ones, bunting his outshoots down the third-base line and meeting his hops half way and poling them over the rightfield fence. The poor old fellow can't last much longer. We seem to hear that portentous cry: "Take him out."

The St. Louis rooter is not only having a vision. He is seeing double. In his mind's eye he sees not one, but two pennants, floating over the old park, which is used by both the American and National League teams in St. Louis, and which has never been devoted to any use but baseball since it was abandoned as a cow pasture in the early 70s.

For in each of the major leagues the team representing this city is within striking distance of the pennant. At this writing, Aug. 10, the Browns of the American League are in first place and the Cardinals of the National League are also in first place.

In 1885, 1886, 1887 and 1888 the Browns battled their way to first place in the American Association, then one of the two major leagues. In 1886 they won undying fame by defeating the Chicago team of the National League in a series for the world's championship. This was a series of seven games. It was arranged that three games were to be played in Chicago and three in St. Louis, and that in the event of a tie the seventh game was to be played in Cincinnati. The final game was not played, as St. Louis won four of the first six.

Here again history has a chance to repeat itself. If the Browns win the American League pennant this year they will play a world series with the pennant winner of the National League, and, as was the case thirty-six years ago, they will have the opportunity to establish their supremacy in the world of baseball.

The boy rooter of that day is a middle-aged man now, but not too old to be thrilled by an encore. Perhaps he has moved over from the bleacher section to the grandstand, but he yells as lustily today when Kenny Williams whales one into Grand boulevard as he did more than thirty years ago when Tip O'Neill walloped one into Sullivan avenue. Perhaps, also, he talks of the "good old days" and points to Tip O'Neill's batting average of .492 in 1887, as compared with Kenny Williams' batting average of .315 in 1922. What he does not tell, probably because he has forgotten it, is that when O'Neill was piling up his high batting average he had many advantages over the present-day batter.

In those "good old days" a batter who got a base on balls was credited with a basehit. He could call for a high or low ball and he need hit only at those which came at the desired height. All others were called "balls," though they split the plate. Another advantage was that four strikes, instead of three, put the batter out. Still another point for the batter was that the pitcher was not permitted to "wind up." The rule said: "He must hold the ball before delivery fairly in front of his body and in sight of the umpire."

Other practices in the game also favored the sluggers of those days. Most of the infielders did not "play off" their bases as they do today to prevent hits from going through their defensive line. Throughout the game, whether runners were on the bases or not, the infielders remained close to the bags. Some first basemen stood on the bag. This is in striking contrast with the present practice of infielders, who spread out so that a ball hit through the infield is sure to be trapped if it passes within forty feet of a base. The great Comiskey of the past, first baseman of the four-time champion Browns, was always on or very near the bag. The great Sisler of today, first baseman of the Browns, plays well back of the baseline, forty feet or more from the bag, except when there is a runner on first. McManus at second and Austin or Ellerbe at third also "play off." In the old days many a lazy roller went through the infield because the basemen, camping on bags, watched it roll by or made belated and futile attempts to stop it. This helped to fatten the batters' averages.

The outfielders also contributed to this result. Most of them seemed to have the idea that their positions were fixed. With very few exceptions they did not shift their positions when different batters came up, as fielders do today. The accepted posture of an outfielder was one of watchful waiting. In Sportsman's Park in those days were three bare spots in the sodded outfield. There were circles not more than three feet square, where the grass had been worn away by outfielders who moved only within this limited range while waiting for the crack of the bat. No such spots can be found in the Browns outfield these days. Tobin, Williams and Jacobson move about much more than did Nicol, Welch and O'Neill of the old Browns. There were some wonderful catches in the old days, but the outfielders, like the infielders, hugged their positions so closely that they missed many a fly which would have been trapped by the more foresighted fielders of today.

All of which, of course, is outside the record, for the figures show that the old four-time champion Browns was a great aggregation of ballplayers. It is no disparagement to that team of happy memory that it did not have the advantage of refinements which have come into the game by the slow processes of secretion since its time. Let the record stand. As the game was played in those days they were great hitters and fielders. And the credit due them is greater when it is remembered that during most of the period of the team's supremacy such modern contraptions as gloves for the fielders were unknown. When Second Baseman Robinson, Shortstop Gleason and Third Baseman Latham of the old Browns stopped hot grounders, sizzling liners or wicked hoppers they did it with nature's weapons, the bare hands. On most teams in those days the only players who wore gloves were the first baseman and the catcher, and even their gloves were ridiculously light and small compared with those now in use. No catchers wore shinguards, few wore chest protectors, and some could not be induced to put on a mask.

The Browns won the American Association pennant in 1885, 1886, 1887 and 1888. The red letter year of their career was 1886, when they battled with Chicago, the National League pennant winner, and gave St. Louis its first and only baseball championship.

A newspaper writer of the time was so impressed with the tremendous import of the series that he wrote: "Had the life of the nation been trembling in the scales there would scarcely have been a more painful anxiety."

But "painful anxiety" must have been the principal contribution of a large section of the public, as the gate receipts were ridiculously small, as judged by present standards. The average attendance at the three games played in Chicago was only 8000, and when the teams came to St. Louis for three games the attendance was not much larger. The biggest crowd of the series, estimated at 11,500, viewed the third St. Louis game. The Browns won in ten innings, by a score of 4 to 3.

The Browns won one of the three games played in Chicago and all of the three played in St. Louis. The championship was cinched Oct. 23, 1886. This ten-inning game was the most hotly contested of the series. The pitchers were Caruthers for the Browns and Clarkson for Chicago.

Much has been said and written about the hitting prowess of the old-time teams, but in this crucial game of the 1886 season the mighty sluggers must have lost their batting eyes, for a reference to the box score shows that the Browns got only four hits and the Chicagos only six.

The game terminated in a way that has caused endless controversy. With only one man down and with Welch on third base, one of Clarkson's fast ones shot past Mike Kelly, the Chicago catcher, and Welch crossed the plate before the ball could be recovered. The scorer put this down as a wild pitch, thus placing the blame on Pitcher Clarkson. But Catcher Kelly came forward in defense of his pitcher and asserted that it was not a wild pitch, but a passed ball. "Clarkson put it right over," he said. "It went through my hands and it ought to be scored against me as a passed ball."

Two survivors of the world's champion Browns who remained to watch with interest the progress of the 1922 Browns were Charles Comiskey, owner of the Chicago White Sox, and Bill Gleason, a St. Louis fireman, Captain of Engine Co. 28. At the time this was written Comiskey was seriously ill. Other living members of the team are Latham, now in Europe, and McGinnis, who has been blind for several years.

Sitting in front of the engine house on Enright avenue, near Vandeventer avenue, recently, Gleason, once the idolized shortstop of the Browns, recalled the "good old days" when a pennant with the words "World's Champions" emblazoned on it, flaunted itself proudly at the top of the Sportsman's Park flagpole.

Despite modern innovations, Gleason is slow to admit that the game is better played now.

"I played at short for several years without wearing a glove," he said. "Later I wore a very thin glove with cut-off fingers. This was mainly to prevent the spin of the ball from burning my hand. Some of those hoppers that come down to short have an awful twist, and when you grab them barehanded the friction takes off the skin, leaving a sore that's as hard to heal as a burn. I remember when Irwin of the Philadelphia team tried to introduce the infielders' mitt. This was a glove a good deal like the one they use now, except that it had no web between the thumb and forefinger. We were playing in Philadelphia and I used one of the mitts in practice. When it was our turn in the field in the first inning I went out to my position with the glove. The umpire, Ferguson, I think, ran out to me and said: 'You're not going to play with that thing on your hand.' 'Sure I am,' I said. But he argued me out of it by saying he would put me out of the game and plaster a fine on me. Some of the other umpires were more reasonable, but the mitt didn't come into general use until after I quit playing ball.

"We used to lay down bunts and work the squeeze play, just as they do now, and we started a lot of the inside stuff that the baseball writers talk so much about nowadays. In fact, we could do everything they do now, except get the money.

"The highest salary I ever got for being the star shortstop on the best baseball team in the world was $2400 a year. That's just about one-tenth of what they pay Hornsby and some of the other star infielders now. When I started playing baseball for the Springfield (Ill.) team I got $50 a month. Some of the owners and managers had a way of getting part of the salary back in fines.

"Chris von der Ahe, owner of the Browns, was very strict in his notions as to what an infielder should be expected to do. I remember once when a sizzling liner went over my head. I reached for it, but couldn't get within a foot of it. Von der Ahe stormed at me for not stopping it and threatened to fine me, but the other players talked him out of it. The scorers weren't any more generous, either. Lots of slams which would go for hits nowadays were chalked up against the fielders as errors. Once when I was playing in Philadelphia a hot grounder hit me on the shin and broke a small bone in my leg. While they were carrying me off the field the official scorer was marking up an error against me. One thing we never heard of in those days was the expression, "too hot to handle," as an excuse for giving the batter credit for a hit. A player was often charged with an error if he merely touched the ball as it went whizzing by, and sometimes when he didn't touch the ball, but when, in the judgment of the scorer, he should have made a greater effort to get it. This cut down the batting averages and at the same time it was unjust to the fielders.

"We were on our Eastern trip and there was a Sunday open date," he said. "Von der Ahe arranged for us to play an exhibition game with a negro team in New Jersey. One of the boys (I think it was Latham) drew up a protest against playing a negro team on Sunday. We all signed it. Von der Ahe accused me of drawing it up and told me I was fired. When the other boys heard of it they all went on a strike. They packed their things and were ready to start home when Von der Ahe gave in and reinstated me.

"In those days there was no baseball commission or no Judge Landis for the players to appeal to. After we won the American League pennant in 1887 Von der Ahe told us we were to play for the world's championship with Detroit, the National League pennant winner. We asked him what we were to get and he said: 'You get nothing. You're working for me and you'll do as I tell you or you'll all be fired.' We had to play that world series without getting any share of the receipts. We lost."

Even in 1886, when the players received a share of the receipts, the distribution to the winners was pitiably small as compared with present-day melon cuttings. It was agreed that the winning team should take all. The total receipts for six world series games were $13,920.10. Von der Ahe took half of this and distributed the remaining half among the Browns players, each of whom received $580 as his share.

At the conclusion of last year's world series, each member of the winning New York Giants received $5265 and each member of the losing New York Yankees received $3510.

One of Gleason's most vivid recollections is the roughness of the fans in some of the big league cities and the intense sectional feeling aroused by the contests. He recalls one lurid afternoon when the Eclipse team of Louisville got into a wrangle with the Browns at Sportsman's Park and refused to finish the game. After the contest had been declared forfeited to the Browns the Louisville players left the park, followed by spectators, who bombarded them with wooden-bottomed seat cushions taken from the grandstand.

The bombardment continued with more formidable missiles after the visitors had climbed into a bus on Grand avenue. The street had been freshly spread with macadam and a large section of the crowd followed the bus to Easton avenue, a distance of nearly a mile, hurling stones at the ballplayers.

"Feeling always ran high at the games," said Gleason. "Intoxicating drinks were sold in the grandstand and there were many fights. Women didn't go to the games much in those days. We were playing in Baltimore once and the Mayor was in the grandstand. In running down to second Curt Welch, our centerfielder, bumped into Greenwood, the Baltimore second baseman, and knocked him down. The Mayor ordered Welch arrested. This was done and it broke up the game. The next day Welch was fined $5 by a Police Judge, although Greenwood testified that the collision was his fault, as he was blocking the bag. We often had to have a police escort in going from the train to our hotel and more than once crowds ran after us throwing stone and brickbats. It was risky for a visiting ballplayer to make his identity known even in a hotel lobby. Somebody might take a poke at him."

Gleason thinks that conditions being even the players of the champion Browns would not suffer by comparison with the present stars. "I don't believe Sisler, Williams or Hornsby could show Tip O'Neill anything about batting. The ball we used in those days was dead compared to the rubber-centered one they use now. I'll bet that if O'Neill, or Big Dan Brouthers of the old Detroits, could land on that lively ball they would be putting it over the fence all the time. I go to the games regularly, and I don't see any better fielding than was done by Welch and Nicol. Why, Nicol regularly threw runners out at first base on hits to right field."

The last time the St. Louis Browns won a pennant, in 1888, they finished with an average of .684. The other teams in the league, in order in which they finished, were Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Cleveland, Louisville and Kansas City.

FROM BOOTBLACK, TO

Life story of the little immigrant from Wales who was glad to herd cows and run errands, who became a master iron puddler at 16, afterwards was elected to political offices and now is Secretary of Labor, told by himself in new book—James J. Davis has had one of those dramatic careers which seem to be possible only in America—Director General of the Loyal Order of Moose; he took an active part in founding Mooseheart. :-: :-: :-:

James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, in his office at Washington. —Copyright, Keystone View Co.

"A LAND where a boy can enter the mills at 11, learn two trades, acquire a sound business education and make a competence in his thirties is not such a bad country as the hot-headed Reds would have us believe."

So declares James J. Davis, the former metal worker who is now Secretary of Labor in President Harding's Cabinet. The paragraph summarizes his own career, one of those life dramas which have been enacted so often in America, the land of promise, but not always with such ample success.

It is an engrossing book, this autobiography which has recently been published under the modest title of "The Iron Puddler" (The Bobbs-Merrill Co.). "I believe I am the first puddler that ever described his job," says Davis, "for I have found no book by a puddler in any American library."

The words indicate the tone of the book, which, written in an easy, humorous, often epigrammatic style, will probably take its place with such books as "The Making of An American," by Jacob Riis, and "The Americanization of Edward Bok."

Bootblack, cowherd, messenger boy, worker in a nail factory, helper in a rolling mill, iron puddler, labor leader, holder of various political offices, fraternal organizer and now Cabinet member, it is a story to encourage many others than the son for whom it was originally written.

Davis' father and grandfather had been iron workers in Wales, and the father came to this country ahead of the family, so that he might earn the money for their passage across the ocean. The future Secretary of Labor was not yet eight years old when Mrs. Davis and six small children arrived by steerage at Castle Garden, in April, 1881. When they had passed the immigrant tests, they found that somebody had made off with their baggage, including the precious feather beds.

"This was the first real tragedy of my mother's life," says Davis. "All the joy of setting foot in the new land was turned to dismay. The stored-up pleasure with which she awaited the greeting of her husband was dashed in a moment, like sweet water flung upon the ground. When I saw the anguish in my mother's face, I was sobered to life's responsibilities. The song had died out of her heart, and I must make it sing again.

"While she was crying in distraction, I wrapped my own tearful face in her skirts and prayed to God that I might grow up in a day—that He would make my arms strong, so that I could go to work at once earning money to replace the lost feather beds. * * * Before the month was out I had found a job in the new country and was earning money. I gave all my earnings to my mother. I have been earning money ever since. As long as I lived at home I turned over all my wages to my mother. When I went away I sent her weekly a percentage of my earnings. This I have ever continued to do.

"My love for my mother and her grief at the loss of the feather beds turned a careless boy into a serious money maker. This led to the study of economics and finance. A man's destiny is often made by trifles light as feathers."

Love of parents and home, friends and fellow workers, is one of the outstanding characteristics of the book, although it is far from sentimentalism and does not interfere with several knock-down-and-drag-'em-out fights which are described in the narrative.

"From my father I learned many things," says Davis. "He taught me to be skillful, and proud of it. He taught me to expect no gift from life, but that what I got I must win with my hands. He taught me that good men would bring forth good fruits. This was all the education he could give me, and it was enough." Of his mother he says:

"From my mother I learned to sing. She was always working and always singing. There were six children in the house, and she knitted and sewed and baked and brewed for us all. * * * And all her songs were songs of praise. She thanked God for life and for strong hands to labor for her little ones."

The family finally settled at Sharon, Pa., and, with the loss of those feather beds still on his mind, little James started out to earn money. First, he caught enough fish to buy a shoe-shining outfit, then he built up a trade among the commercial travelers at the hotel who, he says, "all were dudes and dressed like Sunday every day." Then the boy got himself on the payroll to the extent of $1.25 a month for driving the hotel cows to and from their pasture.

On busy days Secretary Davis has his luncheon brought to his desk. In shirt-sleeves, he is seating with an assistant. —International.

One of the touching incidents in the book occurred in the summer of 1884, when times were hard, the Sharon mill had closed down and the father had gone to Pittsburg to look for work. James, now eleven, was scouring the town for any odd job which would earn a nickel. He says he used to carry notes between sweethearts, pass show bills and ring a handbell for auctions.

An organized charity had opened headquarters to collect clothing and money for the destitute workers. James went there and asked Miss Foraker, in charge, if they needed an errand boy. She explained that there was no payroll.

"I saw a blue serge boy's suit among the pile of garments," says Davis. "It was about my size and had seen little wear. I thought it was the prettiest suit I had ever seen. I asked Miss Foraker how much money it would take to buy the suit. She said nothing was for sale. She wrapped up the suit and placed the package in my arms, saying: 'That's for you, Jimmy.'

"I raced home and climbed into the attic of our little $4-a-month cottage, and in the stifling heat under the low roof I changed my clothes. Then I proudly climbed down to show my blue suit to my mother.

"'Where did you get those clothes, James?' she asked, gravely.

"I told her about Miss Foraker.

"'Did you work for them?'

"'No; everything is free,' I said.

"Mother told me to take the suit off. I went to the attic, blinking a tear out of my eyes, and changed into my old rags again. Then mother took the blue suit, wrapped it up carefully and putting it in my hands told me to take it back to Miss Foraker.

"'You don't understand, James,' she said. 'But these clothes are not for people like us. These are to be given to the poor.'

"I have often smiled as I looked back on it. I'll bet there wasn't a dime in the house. The patches on my best pants were three deep, and if laid side by side would have covered more territory than the new blue suit. To take those clothes back was the bitterest sacrifice my heart has ever known."

When Davis was eleven he got a regular job that paid him 50 cents a day. So he quit school, "just where the Monitor had sunk the Merrimac" in the history class. The job was in a nail factory, putting the good nails into kegs and picking out the headless nails and the splinters to be sent back and melted into window weights. Such work is hard on the hands, and he says that "the big half-dollar that I earned was not unmarred with blood."

As soon as there was an opening in the rolling mill where the elder Davis worked, James quit his job of sorting nails and became a puddler's helper. This was at the age of twelve. It was a happy event, for the constant din of the mill, the half-naked, soot-smeared fellows doing their heroic toil, the patches of white heat glaring from the opened furnace doors "like the teeth of some great, dark, dingy devil grinning across the smoky vapors of the pit," had fascinated the boy.

Soon afterwards he joined the Sharon town band, for love of music is a deep-seated characteristic of Secretary Davis. He became a master puddler at the age of 16. At that time there were but five boys of that age who had become full-fledged puddlers. Here is one of his interesting comments on the metal industry:

"'Life in these mills is a terrible life,' the reformers say. 'Men are ground down to scrap and are thrown out as wreckage.' This may be so, but my life was spent in the mills and I failed to discover it. I went in a stripling and grew into manhood with muscled arms as big as a bookkeeper's legs. The gases, they say, will destroy a man's lungs, but I worked all day in the mills and had wind enough left to toot a clarinet in the band.

"I lusted for labor, I worked and I liked it. And so did my forefathers for generations before me. It is no job for weaklings, but neither was tree felling, Indian fighting, road making and the subduing of a wild continent to the hand of man, as was done by the whole tribe of Americans for the sheer joy of conquering the wild.

"There is something in man that drives him forward to do the world's work and build bigger for the coming generations, just as there is something in nature that causes new growth to come out of old dirt and new worlds to be continually spawned from the ashes of old, played-out suns and stars. When nature ceases to mold new worlds from the past decay, the universe will wither; and when man loses the urge to build and goes to tearing down, the end of his story is at hand."

It was during the early years at Sharon, while little Davis was going to school and earning all he could at shoe shining and other odd jobs, that he got the job of telegraph messenger boy, and incidentally received impressions which moved him strongly in after years and were instrumental in the founding of a great school.

For Davis was perhaps the guiding spirit in establishing Mooseheart, the educational institution conducted by the Loyal Order of Moose, 37 miles west of Chicago. The combination farm, school and town of Mooseheart is the home of more than 1000 fatherless children and more than 100 mothers who are there with their children, besides some old men whose working days are over. The sympathetic heart of a little telegraph boy was its genesis.

"Of the many death messages that I bore to the workers' homes in Sharon, few found a home that was able to last a day after the burial of the breadwinner. He had failed to make provision for such an accident—no savings in the bank, no life insurance. As soon as the worker was stricken, his children were at the mercy of the world. I saw so much of this that the pity of it entered deep into my boy heart and never afterward could I forget it."

As young Davis carried his telegrams, and saw the tragedies of the poor, the problem stared him in the face and his boyish mind came to these conclusions:

"When a laborer dies, his little children are scattered to the winds. Brothers and sisters may never see one another again. When a man with property dies, his children are kept together. Their future is made safe by the property.

"Labor provides for today. Property provides for tomorrow.

"That truth was driven into my mind when I saw one family after another scattered by the death of a laborer. * * * From that day on, I argued that we should buy a home and save a little every day for capital. It was our duty thus to protect ourselves, should our father die, against being scattered among strangers."

As director-general of the Loyal Order of Moose, Davis built up the membership to more than 500,000, mostly working men, and a small weekly assessment upon all these foster fathers has created a plant at Mooseheart now valued at more than $5,000,000, and they provide a revenue of $1,200,000 a year to maintain and enlarge it. Which is quite a substantial outcome for a little errand boy's dream.

But meanwhile, as a skilled worker in iron and then in tin, Davis had become a leader of organized labor, emerging slowly from the ranks as he worked at various places, including Pittsburg, Niles, O., Birmingham, Ala., Elwood, Ind., and even a peonage camp in Louisiana, his experience at which place is not the least interesting part of the book.

It was while working in a tin-plate mill at Elwood that Davis had an ambition to become City Clerk. His opponents started a story that Davis was a wild Welshman, from a land where the tribes lived in caves and wore leather skirts and wooden shoes; that he had had his first introduction to pants-wearing people when he came to America; that he had not yet learned to speak English, could not spell his own name and could not count above ten. The publication of these charges in the opposition paper, says Davis, offered him his only chance of election.

Thereafter the candidate went to all his meetings with a big slate, with which he demonstrated to the audience his ability at writing and at doing sums in arithmetic. But it looked bad for the Republicans, and Davis was much discouraged. Late one night he was walking past the office of the opposition editor.

"I happened to see him in his front office, and on a sudden impulse I went in, took hold of his collar and gave him a good licking. The next day he bawled me out worse than ever. He said I was not only a wild Welshman and a blockhead, but, what is more deadly still, I was a gorilla and an assassin.

"And the next day I was elected."

He was the only man on the Republican city ticket who succeeded. After four years in that office he was elected, by a large majority, to be County Recorder of Madison County, at Anderson, Ind., and held the place from 1903 to 1907 inclusive. In the latter year he became director-general of the Moose. During his term as County Recorder Davis had saved money, for he was unmarried then and with no dissipation but books. Thus the tin worker had become a small capitalist. By the time he was 40, he says, he was rated as a prosperous man.

One of the interesting things about this book is the author's conservative attitude on the vexed questions of capitalism and the rights of labor. By virtue of a special resolution, he still carries his union card and pays his dues.

In 1914 Davis was married to Miss Jean Rodenbaugh of Pittsburg, and their family consists of a son and a daughter. Before he became Secretary of Labor, the family divided their time between Pittsburg and Mooseheart. Now they reside in Washington.

"When will man's turmoil cease, when will he find calm?" writes Secretary Davis in conclusion. "I do not know. I only know that toil and struggle are sweet, and that life well lived is victory. And that calm is death. Man must face an iron world, but he is iron to subdue it. The lessons of my life were learned at the forge and I am grateful for my schooling."

Carrying the Message to Garcia

War Department issues a citation giving Distinguished Service Cross to Maj. Andrew S. Rowan, retired, for extraordinary heroism—Information which he gathered in a perilous journey through the Spanish enemy's lines was of great value in the war to free Cuba—Military moves, then closely guarded, are now revealed—Rowan's exploit was the subject of a famous preachment by Elbert Hubbard. -:- -:-

WITHIN the past two or three years thousands of men in all ranks of the military service have been decorated with medals and crosses for acts of heroism. Many posthumous awards have been made. This was the nation's way of showing its esteem to those who rendered signal service in time of need.

The decorations, without exception, were conferred for deeds during and since the World War. Therefore, it was an extraordinary event when, the other day, the lists announced the presentation of a decoration to a veteran of the Spanish-American War.

July 21, 1922, the War Department issued a citation awarding the Distinguished Service Cross to Maj. Andrew S. Rowan, retired, for "extraordinary heroism" at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, more than twenty-four years ago. Little or no explanation is available as to the reason for the delay. One reason is that he seemed to have been "overlooked." Another, and perhaps more plausible, is that the Distinguished Service Cross was not in vogue at the time.

There is just one slight thread of connection between what he did in '98 and the World War. It is the claim that his heroism was cited as an example to the men preparing for that conflict. Rowan's exploit was the subject of an essay, "A Message to Garcia," which Elbert Hubbard wrote in the Philistine, and which has been printed in every language. This was used extensively in recruiting and training for the World War.

The citation, which follows, gives none of the details, but only the outlines, of Rowan's thrilling performance.

"For extraordinary heroism in connection with the operations in Cuba, in May, 1898. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American campaign Lieut. Rowan, under disguise, entered the enemy lines in Oriente, crossed the Island of Cuba and not only succeeded in delivering a message to Gen. Garcia, but secured secret information relative to existing military conditions in that region, of such great value that it had an important bearing on the quick ending of the struggle and the complete success of the United States Army."

Some twenty-three years ago Rowan's work was the subject of narratives and popular enthusiasm. It opened the way for Hobson and Sampson and for the victories in and around the Island of Cuba. The real, confidential details remained untold. It is believed they are here presented to the public for the first time. A report by the now Maj. Rowan was made to the War Department under date of April 14, 1922. From it the Post-Dispatch is enabled to get the details that form the basis for the story.

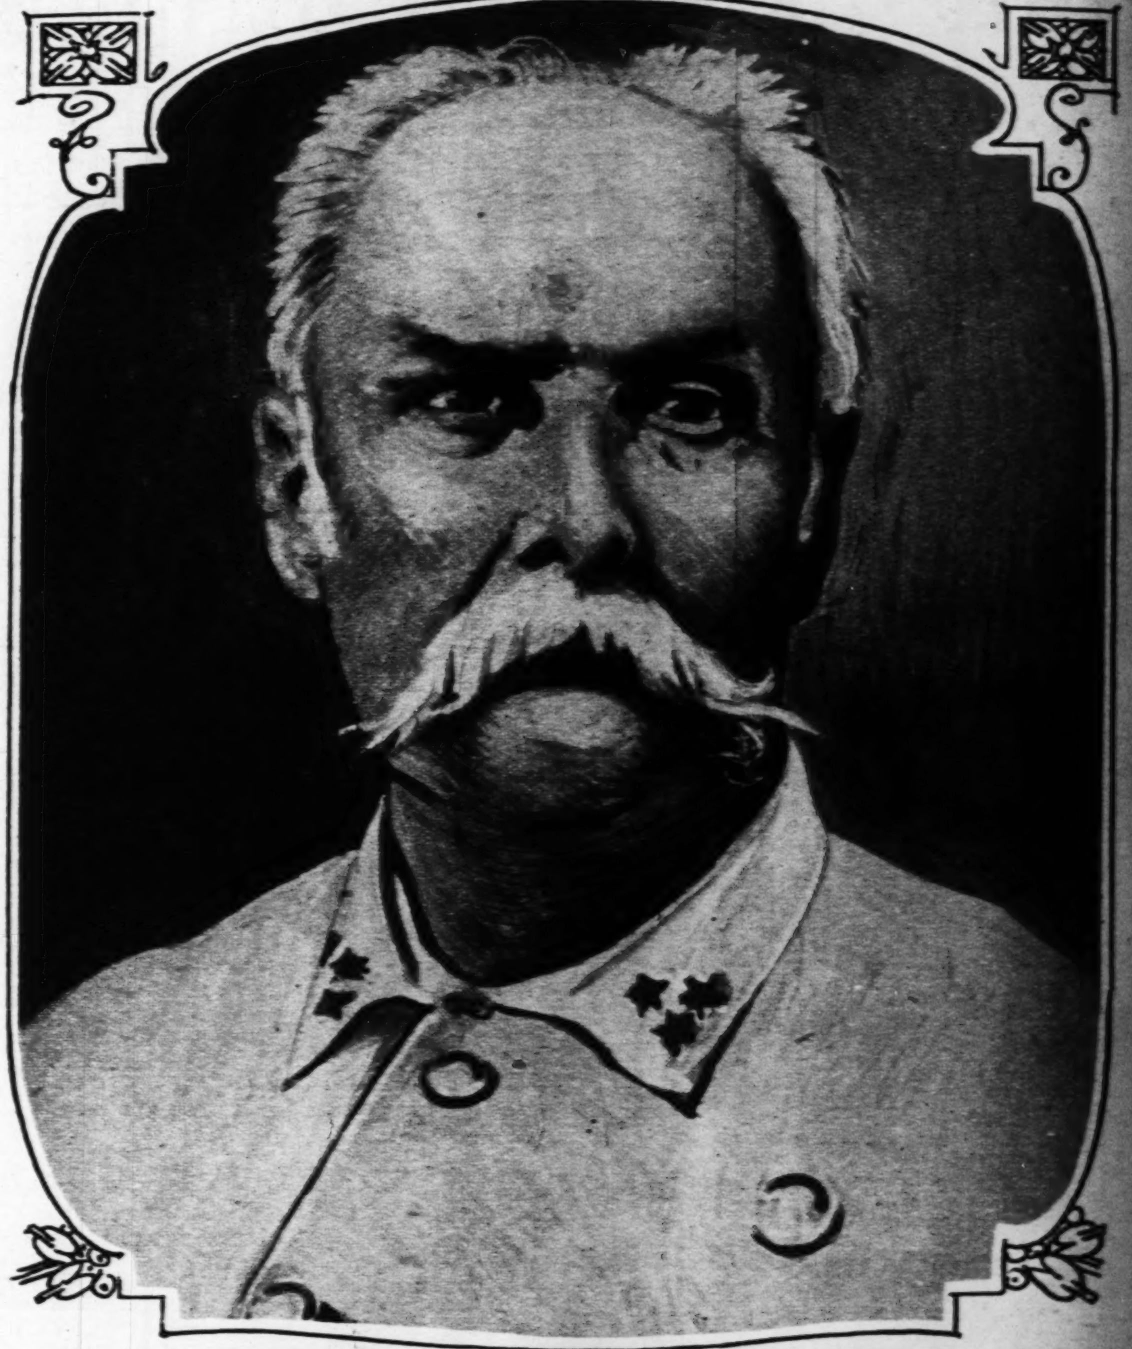
Long before the soldiers were entraining for the front he was preparing the way. He was the first American officer after declaration of war to enter Cuba. His movements and the success attending them were in very great measure responsible for what was done later and for the termination of the struggle in the short period of 105 days.

Gen. Nelson A. Miles recommended him, upon his return, for promotion to Lieutenant-Colonel.

"Gen. Miles appreciated from the first," Rowan said, touching this, "the vital quality of the information that my penetration of the Spanish lines had placed at his disposal; and from that time things began to move. Expeditions to aid the insurgents and harass the enemy that had failed of their object by reason of the lack of information, and other causes, now began to reach their destination with clocklike precision. Among these was the Florida expedition to Banes Bay, piloted by the guides that I had brought back with me, and carrying back Col. Hernandez, who, upon rejoining Gen. Garcia, made the arrangements for the concentration of about 5000 Cuban troops at Aserraderos, to act in conjunction with the American army and navy in the pending Santiago campaign.

"At Aserraderos Gen. Garcia met Admiral Sampson and Gen. Shafter, and arranged the details for the attack on Santiago de Cuba. This meeting was a direct result of my five hours' conference with Gen. Garcia May 1, 1898, at Bayamo; the concentration could not have been effected so promptly had I not brought back the means to accomplish it."



Gen. Calixto Garcia, who led the Cuban fight for freedom.

Rowan completed his work in one month, gathering all the data upon which to formulate the movement of troops. When President McKinley ordered the army forward the military information had been brought "up to date."

"In speaking of the happy results of my rapid transit across the theater of war and through the enemy's lines," Rowan continued, "Col. Wagner, who had transmitted the order that had sent me on my way, said to me that, taking into account the paucity of the information on file at the declaration of war and the celerity with which the hiatus was filled, he could not help quoting Goldwin Smith: 'God has been kind to children, idiots and the United States.'"

The then Lieut. Rowan was on duty April 8, 1898, in the office of military information in the War Department at Washington. At noon of that day Maj. Arthur L. Wagner, just referred to as Col. Wagner, who was then Adjutant-General, notified Rowan he had been selected to carry out a decision made that morning at a conference between President McKinley and Secretary of War Alger. This was to send an officer to Eastern Cuba (Oriente) in case of war to ascertain the military conditions in that region, which was likely to become the theater of war, and to bring the War Department's information up to date.

Lieut. Rowan had no time for long farewells to friends or relatives. Orders were orders and he was a soldier. He had only to carry them out, even if they meant his capture by the Spanish forces. Capture would have meant death at sunrise, or sooner. He packed up what he needed at once and left Washington that midnight. The next day at noon, April 9, he embarked from New York on the Atlas Line, S. S. Adirondack, for Kingston, Jamaica, British West Indies.

"Maj. Wagner's instructions to me," Rowan said in his recent report, "were delivered orally and were, in brief, to proceed to Kingston, Jamaica, by the first available transportation and there make arrangements to get into Cuba upon receipt of a cipher telegram to that effect. Once in Cuba I was to bring the military data up to date and conduct myself in accordance with my surroundings. I was authorized to attach myself to any body of insurgents operating in the field if the Cuban commander might so elect. I was to carry no papers other than such as might serve to identify me with the American Consul-General at Kingston and through him with the Cuban junta. In this connection Maj. Wagner referred to the cases of Nathan Hale in the Revolutionary War and of Lieut. Richey in the Mexican War, both caught with dispatches on them.

Rowan received the cipher cablegram fourteen days after leaving his post at Washington. On April 22 he was instructed as follows: "Join G-A-R-C-I-A as soon as possible." Garcia was the Cuban commander. The war had started April 21.

At 10 a. m. of April 23, dressed as an English hunter, the officer left Kingston and crossed to Jamaica, reaching St. Ann's Bay about 1 a. m.

"Here," he said, "I boarded a small sail boat and, by daylight, I had passed beyond the neutral waters of Jamaica and had entered the Caribbean. By nightfall our small craft (manned by three Cuban sailors, one orderly (assistante) and myself, and carrying some antiquated small arms of various types, intended for the Cubans) was approaching the territorial waters of Cuba, habitually guarded at that period by the enemy (Spanish) lancha patrol.

"We kept well off until dark and then, under full sail, made the best of our way to the nearest point of the shore, coming to anchor about 11 p. m., in a small inlet, about 50 yards out. I was thus the first American officer to enter the enemy's lines after the declaration of war, albeit not in our uniform.

"The next morning I proceeded through the forest, afoot, till mounts could be procured. At one camp I found a number of deserters from the Spanish garrison at Manzanillo. From them I got some statements of doubtful value concerning the conditions in Manzanillo. About noon, May 1, 1898 (Manila Day), after having reached the Sierra Maestra range of mountains, I reached Bayamo, the insurgent headquarters, where I was identified through my escort as delegado Americano, commissioned by the American War Department as a man of confidence—a term which suffers in translation, but which, in this instance, served only to solder our mutual purpose of acting promptly in an emergency.

"I was the first to impart the news that the United States had declared war against Spain; and, following this auspicious announcement, I at once delivered, orally, my message to Gen. Garcia."

Forthwith he explained his mission in Cuba and outlined some of the facts he wished to learn. Among them were the number of Spanish troops, their distrihis mission in Cuba and out- e wished to learn. Among Spanish troops, their distribution, their mode of warfare, arms and equipment, clothing, food, condition and quality of the Spanish soldiers, their morale and the character of their commanding officers. He inquired about the roads and the seasons and the sanitary conditions. He also found out what the Cubans needed to harass the enemy until the Americans arrived, and the topography, or lay of the land, especially where there might be fighting.

"And lastly," said Rowan, "I would place myself under his orders in any expedition he might have in view, as it was my desire to get some insight into the Cuban guerilla method of fighting in the Cuban manigua (jungle).

"Garcia and I conferred five hours. He said he had decided to send me back to the United States, with three of his ablest and most trusted staff officers, who knew all his plans, were thoroughly familiar with status quo and who would answer all questions that he, himself could, respecting existing conditions in Eastern Cuba. Indeed, he proposed to put at the disposal of the American War Department as much information as he himself possessed. What more could I wish?

"Could I leave at once? May 1, 1898, 5 p. m.? There was nothing for me to do but stand to horse. What I had come for I had gotten. It was for me to get it back to the War Department as promptly as possible. I recalled that, in a case of this kind when 'tis done, then 'twere well it were done quickly."

Rowan was accompanied by Gen. Enrique Collazo, Col. Carlos Hernandez and Dr. Vieta, an expert in tropical diseases. He had to swim the Cauto River next morning, a few miles above the head of navigation, "Cauto-el-Embarcadero," where the Spanish troops were embarking for the coast of Manzanillo.

"My course across the Island of Cuba," Rowan continued, "may be roughly described as astride the seventy-seventh degree meridian—the meridian of Washington—swing slightly to the east to reach Bayamo, thence slightly to the east, then slightly northwest until the meridian was touched at Victoria-de-las Tunas, thence to the north coast, approximately along that line to the Gulf of Maniti, where our party arrived about sunset, May 5, 1898.

"From a mangrove swamp on the west side of the Manati inlet our sailor guides drew a small ship's boat of about 104 cubic feet capacity, too small to accommodate all our party, who, reduced to six—three officers and three sailors—must sit upright for several days and nights, with our supplies under our seats and between our feet.

"Dr. Vieta was, accordingly, sent back with our abandoned mounts, and at 11 p. m. we boarded our craft and made our way through the narrow neck of this harbor, passing under the guns of a small Spanish fort on the eastern side of the inlet. Here we again entered the Spanish lancha patrol limits, and at daylight were out of sight of the Cuban littoral and wel on our way to Key West via Nassau, New Providence Bahama Islands."

The American Consul-General here, Mr. McLean, enabled the party to board the schooner Fearless for Key West, where they arrived May 13.

"Thence I proceeded to Washington, D. C., where reported to the Adjutant-General, H. C. Corbin, wh congratulated me on my safe return and at once disavowed the wording of a telegram that he had dispatched to me at Tampa, placing the responsibility fo the error on some subordinate in his office. He thereupon offered to conduct me 'through the private way to report to the Secretary of War, Alger. The Secretary, after hearing a narrative account of my journey congratulated me in high terms, and then directe me to invite the two staff officers of Gen. Garcia, whom I had brought back with me to Tampa, to Washington.'

Gen. Miles, on May 23, or one month after Rowan ha started for Jamaica, recommended that he be made "a Lieutenant-Colonel of one of the regiments o 'immunes.' "

"Lieut. Rowan," wrote Gen. Miles, "made a journey across Cuba, was with the insurgent army under Gen Garcia and brought most important and valuable information to the Government. This was a most perilous undertaking and in my judgment Lieut. Rowan performed an act of heroism and cool daring that ha rarely been excelled in the annals of warfare."

Rowan's exploits were not without drawbacks. "Let it not be thought for a moment," he said, "that my task was devoid of the usual concomitants of personal advantage, petty envy and low ambition on the part of those who should have sunk out of sight every motive but the common good. Of such I may mention a personal quarrel between the United States Consul-General at Kingston, Jamaica, and members of the press; and the miswording of Adjutant-General Corbin's telegram, which he was so prompt to disavow."

He makes this explanation of his account of the affair, which was obtained when the War Department decided to look into the need for an award.

"A report of this kind necessarily involves in large degree," he said, "the personal equation and the ego to an unusual extent, unavoidable, indeed, since my mission depended on myself alone for its conduct. But as the Government placed sufficient reliance upon me to trust me to do my work alone, it is but reasonable that it should bear with me in accepting my own account of how I performed my duty through a trying period."

He had witnesses to what he had done, some of whom he thinks may yet be living.

"After reporting to the Commanding General of the army," Rowan states, "by order of the Secretary of War, I accompanied Gen. Miles to appear before a Cabinet meeting. At the close of the session the President, McKinley, congratulated me upon the method in which I had performed my task of procuring information of the enemy in the enemy's country and ended by saying: 'You have done a very brave deed.' With these words the circuit of the President's verbal order to 'send an officer into Eastern Cuba (Oriente) and bring the military information up to date' was closed and complete.

"I had received the congratulations and the thanks of every officer to whom I was responsible—the President, the Secretary of War, the Adjutant-General and the Commander-in-Chief of the army. And, above all, was the vital and liquid quality of the assets of my mission—the immediate and practical use that was made of the information that my journey across Cuba had made available.

"It remains to call to mind the scantiness of the military information at hand regarding the paramount strategic position of the Island of Cuba in 1898, and to express the hope that never again may the advent of war find it necessary to dispatch an officer through enemy lines to obtain information that should be at hand, ready to be passed to the Commanding General, at a moment's notice, in order to enable him to act promptly or otherwise, as the occasion demands.

"For the winds may not always blow from the right direction, as they did in 1898. The marooned insurgent General may not always be able, anxious and complaisant. The return voyage may not always be assured. And the ultimate authority may not always be receptive of information gathered under the circumstances of rush, run and improvisation."

In his famous pamphlet, "A Message to Garcia," Elbert Hubbard wrote:

"The point that I wish to make is this: McKinley gave Rowan a letter to be delivered to Garcia; Rowan took the letter and did not ask, 'Where is he at?'

"By the Eternal! there is a man whose form should be cast in deathless bronze and the statue placed in every college of the land. It is not book learning young men need, nor instruction about this and that, but a stiffening of the vertebrae which will cause them to be loyal to a trust, to act promptly, concentrate their energies; do the thing—carry the message to Garcia.

"Gen. Garcia is dead now, but there are other Garcias. No man who has endeavored to carry out an enterprise where many hands were needed, but has been well nigh appalled at times by the imbecility of the average man—the inability or unwillingness to concentrate on a thing and do it."

THE WOES OF POVERTY AND OF WAR, AS CONCEIV BY

Stark and grim, there is a wrenching pathos in these paintings, drawings and lithographs by Willibald Krain—Publication of his war pictures was not permitted in any country during the great struggle. :-:

WILLIBALD KRAIN, examples of whose grimly powerful pictures are given on these two pages, is among the most prominent of those younger German artists who are bound neither by the academic traditions of the imperial era, nor by the spirit of lawlessness which, in centering the artist's mind on his own passing moods without any effort to use recognizable symbols, has broken with all traditions.

Perhaps it is because, with him, revolt against modern social conventions was of slower growth and because, even before the war, he conceived the artist's function as being the interpretation of the folk spirit. Thus his pictures of misery are not so much direct transcripts of scenes he has observed—although as a magazine illustrator he has given proof of the accuracy of his vision—as the filtration of experience through an exceedingly sensitive and responsive spirit.

His large canvases, "Poor People" and "Those Who Carry the Load," sincerely and simply translate into generalizations the bitter sorrow of the masses of wage workers who are held down by oppression and privilege.

The lithographs, from a series entitled "War," could not, of course, be published in Germany during the World War, against which they were a protest. Censors in the allied countries would not permit them to be published, nor even exhibited, for fear that the knowledge that not all of Germany was infected with the spirit of militarism would undermine the martial determination of their own people to crush the enemy.

The series on "War" was finally brought out by the Art Institute Orell Fussli, in Zurich, and plates from it are here reproduced by permission of the National Council for Reduction of Armaments.

The Bowery Passed Out With Booze

New York's former thoroughfare of evil fame now a commonplace street of small trade—Once the New World's toughest lane of license and levity—With prohibition and consequent high prices for strong drink, the filthy tinsel that gave glamor to "Bouwerie Lane" has worn off. -:-

By EDGEWORTH DOWNER

"The Bowery! The Bowery!
They do such things and they say such things
On the Bowery, the Bowery!
I'll never go there any more.

YET I was there the other evening after dusk, mooning disconsolately through the familiar street, struck with the pathos of mutation. For death is upon the Bowery; and, sadder yet, a living death.

This common street that lay there in the deepening summer night, filled only with hollow noises and fetid smells, dressed in tinsel and palely virtuous! Was it possible that here had been one of the amazing places of the earth? The legend zone of riot and license, the warren of strayed humanity, the port for the storm-shaken and tide-broken, whose fame was wide as the world—what had time done? I stood in the darkness of this expiring region, thinking of the adventurous women and the turbulent men who had colored its past, but looking at the smug little shops and the smug little people of its present. Two things came into my mind.

Today there are seven banks in the Bowery; yesterday there were seventy dives. Only a few years ago the business men of this place of evil fame had set out to change its name to Central Broadway or Cooper street. I suppose now the business men can show that there is more trade in the Bowery than ever before, that more money changes hands there in an hour now than in a week of the old times, and that real estate along this street is worth dollars to match the cents of fifty years ago. But whether those things be signs of life is something else again. The low-caste Hindu believes that one may die a man and live again as a cat. It may be true of streets.

The Bowery, in the days of its notoriety, was a thoroughfare without a duplicate in any land. It was the Main Street of the American underworld. Long ago it was the Fifth avenue of the outlawed. More recently it declined into a paupers' alley, a roadway through the depths and dregs of our society.

In the beginning the most dashing adventurers and adventuresses came there and dwelt there and made merry there, as they do with less frankness and more viciousness in the Broadway of today. Its wild dives and furious pace were celebrated everywhere. Tourists from the world's end were conducted through its tortuous retreats and went away awed, spellbound; they had witnessed "Life."

Here the burglar and the gunman and the brigand and the bunco man walked about in easy familiarity with their neighbors. The rough-and-ready theaters opened their doors to an amazing assortment of castaways, male and female. Saloons and dance halls and evil resorts of every sort threw away their keys and forgot the hours. And streams of the respectable came and patronized the theaters and dives, eager for the thrill of observing vice.

Such a place was possible to the New York and the America of thirty to forty years ago. The underworld then was a place with a geographical center and fixed borders. Its inhabitants were recognized members of the community and its evils accepted facts. After a time the Bowery got to be too noxious and its denizens left it willingly for other quarters of the town or were driven out. A great change came down on the old street. The theaters and resorts closed, one by one, but the saloons remained open. Old buildings were remodeled into the cheapest of hotels, and soon the Bowery became the street of the flop, the tin-can tramp, the panhandler, the whisky-soaked bum, the most hopeless derelict.

As the street of the disinherited and the lost, the Bowery acquired a fresh celebrity. It was the capital of Hoboland, and the penniless wanderers from all the vast expanses of the continent drifted sooner or later into its sordid embraces.

The numberless saloons had a great deal to do with the congregation of tramps and down-and-outs in the Bowery. Thirty years ago every morning saw the empty beer kegs rolled into the gutters before the saloons, where the brewery drays might gather them up and leave full ones in their places. In each such keg there was a quart or two of flat beer left, that could not be spigoted. The tin-can tramps came along, tipped up the barrel and got out the last dregs, which they carried off in their tin and drank at leisure in the flops. The waterpower and electric beer pump put an end to this scavenger drinking, but the homeless submerged had got used to the Bowery and they stuck.

There were three types of these men of the depths. First came the vagrants, or tramps. They had been runaway boys in their youth and some of them still were young. The open road and the life without restraint had called them early, and then the great city had shaken its siren locks at them and the Bowery had opened its long dark arms.

Second in line were the casual laborers, or shovel stiffs. These were the true hoboes, or penniless tourists, who went hither and thither across the country, wherever transient labors called them and life was not too demanding. They worked in the wheat and the hop fields and the vineyards through the summer and fall. Winter found them centered in the Bowery and its flops, where there was always a big, hot stove in the center of every reading room and counters banked high with free lunch in every saloon.

In more recent years these wandering workers were more or less organized for strike-breaking purposes by labor and detective agencies, which built up a business in this kind of service to employers. From the Bowery and its contiguous places went out the largest armies of irregular workers used to thwart striking workmen and all too often to mulct the employers. The union men called them scabs and their own world referred to them as finks, one of the lowest terms in the lexicon of Vagabondia.

But the third division of Bowery dwellers was an even lower type of human flotsam. The so-called bums, the whisky-soaked panhandlers and petty sneaks, usually old and life-worn wrecks, came to the last port under the setting sun.

In the Bowery these types met and mingled, with sad results to the young tramps who came in from the open lands of the West. Usually those were nothing worse than unstable boys, afflicted with exaggerated wanderlust—dromomania, to use the technical term. A little contact with the city changed these lads into criminals. Most of them suffered in the beginning from all sorts of youthful neuroses and many from dementia praecox, but there was little of viciousness about them until they got their contact with the older and more maculate types.

The Bowery dwellers of the second class were equally to be regarded as sick men, mentally. These wandering laborers were all neurotics of one type or another. Many of them were morons—mental defectives and paranoiacs. And the decayed bums were without exception victims of senile dementia and alcoholic psychosis.

Of such degenerates was constituted the population of this grotesque street. But illness and drink were not yet the worst of these sad men's woes. Many of them were narcotic addicts, and in the Bowery they bought their drugs cheap. In the old days the snowbird and sleighrider went to No. 9 and bought a deck for 10 cents—enough to make his craving system happy for a few hours. The whisky soak got his tipple for 5 cents and even for as little as 3 cents—man-killing stuff, but alcohol, nevertheless.

Food and drink could be got in any of the yawning saloons for 5 cents and one might sleep under a roof for 10 cents in the flops, and between blankets in the lodging houses for a quarter.

There were the bread lines and the missions. When things got too hard to bear one might always get religion, go to the missions, declare one's conversion and fill one's belly with food and rest one's bones in sleep for the low price of a pious lie. So the mission stiff came to be a familiar Bowery type.

But the other night I looked through all the length of the Bowery for these familiars, and they were gone. The saloons are closed, with few exceptions. The flops are gone and the missions are bare of exhorting converts.

No loungers on the street corners, no sad, dejected figures, shuffling through the gloom, no drunkards sagging homeward from the dirty bars. All that made the color and the terror of this dark and wondrous street gone into forgetfulness! I, who had known it all so closely in its former phase, looked about me with much rubbing of the eyes and sighing; for it is hard to accept this row of bakeries and restaurants and banks and pawnshops and clothing stores and all manner of trumpery merchants, lairs for that vast side of terrible romance that was the Bowery.

A punchy little man of business tried to explain to me why the tramp and bum had gone from his street. There were no men out of work, he said, so there were no breadlines and no Bowery castaways. But when I reminded him that the greatest plague of unemployment in American history had been upon us last winter and that millions still were jobless, if the Federal census people are correct in what they say, he was puzzled and could give me no explanation.

But other men had better information. They told me that two things had killed the old Bowery—the prohibition law and the consequent high price of booze. With whisky at 75 cents and a dollar a drink there could be no Bowery traffic in the stuff, and so the old rum-soaks had been scattered into the institutions and under the sod. Some had gone out and were bootlegging or moonshining, no doubt, but they were as good as dead to the Bowery.

Much the same fate had overtaken the drug addicts. There had been the day of the 10-cent deck of morphine. Now it was a matter of at least $10 a day to buy enough drug for the normal addict; and often, when the officers were active, it cost as much as $50. The result has been that many men who merely were unfortunates before, with little harm in them, have been forced into crime to satisfy their cravings. I was told the story of one such sufferer, who found that he had to steal an automobile a week to keep up with the cost of his dope.

Naturally, such a state of affairs had driven the street's old children out into the world. Living the life of the derelict had got beyond Bowery standards and means and so the old order in this Street of [illegible] the forsaken Bowery, faded away.

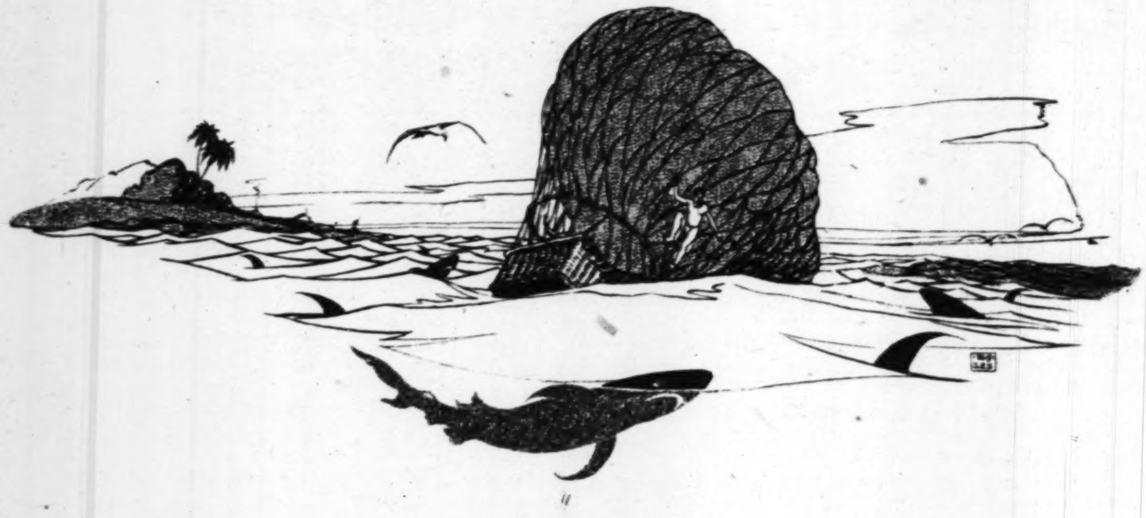
62 and Rich, He Must Work Hard or Die

The ironical sentence which fate has passed upon Emil Leandro Melville, parachute-jumper, acrobat and aerialist, after a life of toil and danger to win himself a restful old age—When he was 60 he retired from circus work, to live on the fortune he had accumulated, but his increased weight and fatty degeneration of the heart have driven him back to the job—The doctor says that otherwise Melville the Marvelous would soon drop dead.



POOR Melville has been sentenced to hard labor for the rest of his natural life. Considering the circumstances, one may say that it is a very cruel penalty, a buffet dealt by Fate in one of her ironic and heartless moods. Here follows the true story of the woeful predicament of Emil Leandro Melville.

You may object that Melville is a stranger to you, whose tribulations concern you no more than those of any other stranger. But the chances are that you have seen him, gaped at him, admired his daring exploits, although you may not recognize the name. Do you recall the day you stood amid a breathless throng, gazing upward into the immeasurable sky, to watch a speck of a man leap in a parachute from a flaming balloon? That man was Melville.

And those other times you stood on the circus lot, with the pennons snapping in the wind, the band blaring its brassy chant, the hoarse voices of the barkers filling the air and the gay crowds surging and craning to see a man in spangles shot from the mouth of a cannon and thrown through the air to catch the bar of a high trapeze? Melville again. Or perhaps you recall the performer thrown into the upper air from a catapult, or the fellow who did the death-inviting aerial gymnastics over the circus crowd, without a net to fend him from the cruel kiss of the hard mother earth. Once more, the Marvelous Melville.

Melville was born, he told an interviewer, in San Francisco. This obituary manner of beginning the narrative is unjustified, since Emil Leandro lives and hopes to be long among us, in spite of his frightful penance. But just so did he begin the tale himself, explaining that the San Francisco setting had much to do with his career.

French on his mother's side and Irish on the other, Emil Leandro grew up. He makes no concealment of the truth that he was a harum-scarum youth—wrestler, boxer, runner, jumper and general taker of chances and risks. In 1885 a balloon ascension had been advertised, the first of the sort on the Pacific Coast. But the balloonist did not appear and the huge crowd was about to be disappointed when some of Melville's young associates pushed him forward and dared him to make the flight. Now Emil Leandro hadn't acquired much respect for his precious life at 25 and wasn't in the habit of taking dares. He said yes.

The feat was much more difficult and daring than it sounds today. Ballooning then was an unknown mode of locomotion in our West. Again, the parachute had not been introduced and the reckless flyers of that day rose with their gas bags as far as the hot air and smoke would carry them. A few minutes later they descended with the bag, as slowly as Providence and a little luck would permit. If anything went wrong there was a funeral. Melville had never even seen a balloon before.

On this first air voyage he descended into a bed of onions and injured nothing, unless it was his olfactory organ. Afterwards a balloon caught fire with him and he plunged into a pine tree and thence into a creek, escaping with minor hurts by what seemed a miracle.

So Melville set about to make this balloon riding trade of his a bit more safe. His mind turned instinctively to parachutes, of which he claims to be the inventor. It is true that J. P. Blanchard, a Frenchman, leaped from balloons in a parachute as early as 1785, thereby interfering sorely with Melville's claim of just a hundred years later. Melville knew nothing of Blanchard or previous parachute jumpers, he made his own experiments and constructed his own apparatus. He invented the parachute for California, at least.

But it was no pleasant life he had chosen. Once he dropped into a raging mountain stream, another time was carried far into the wilderness, foodless and clad only in tights. Next he made an ascent from the Cliff House in San Francisco, was carried miles out to sea and landed in the Pacific. He had given up his life as lost when the old Alameda came steaming along, picked him up and took him to Honolulu. There the real adventures of Melville the Marvelous began.

This was back in 1886 or 1887 and the Hawaiians had never seen a balloonist. The old King, husband of Queen Lil, desired to watch this supernatural creature perform, so Mel went back to San Francisco and returned with a balloon. He made a flight for his majesty and landed in a thorn tree. The tree had to be cut down before the tortured balloonist could be freed. Doctors were two weeks picking the thorns out of his swollen flesh.

Emil Leandro Melville.

But the Kanaka King liked it, and Mel flew for him again. This time the wind carried our hero beyond the outer reef and he fell into the sea, where he was immediately attacked by a school of big sharks. Melville could see the great fins cutting the water on all sides of him, and five different times great man-eaters came at him, turned on their backs, with their frightful mouths gaping at him.

But the big bag of the balloon disconcerted the sharks. They didn't know quite what to make of such a monster, and their fear of it saved Melville's life. He clung to the balloon till a longboat from H. M. S. Cormorant reached him.

Then the Spreckels sugar interests had Melville make a flight for the delight of their employes at Hawaii. Melville was carried over the boiling lava bed in the eight-mile-wide crater of Kilauea. On this occasion he lost every vestige of hope and resigned himself to a frightful death. He even considered casting loose from his balloon and punging into the fiery mass to make his end swift and merciful, instead of settling slowly into the furnace. He was flying without a parachute and clinging to his gas bag.

But he escaped. The heat from the lava and the rising blanket of hot air kept the deflating balloon afloat until it drifted across the crater and dashed Melville against the rim of its terrible saucer, a few dozen feet above the seething volcanic mass. He struggled out and collapsed.

He quit the Hawaiians after that, but not ballooning. He had looked death in the eye a dozen times, but he continued to fly. There was a reason. Ballooning paid well, and Melville wanted to amass a fortune and retire to a life of ease and tranquillity. For that he was willing to endure all danger and risk death a hundred times a year.

So he continued to fly about California for a year longer, and the railroads ran excursions that brought people from towns and hamlets hundreds of miles away to see him. Finally, at Fresno, something happened to the apparatus and he fell face downward into a mass of stone at the edge of a quarry. He survived, but his face yet bears the horrible reminders of that last flight.

Melville had had enough of ballooning. He turned to safer pursuits, such as being fired from a cannon, hurled from a catapult and performing his aerial gymnastics without a net. For seventeen or eighteen years he did these stunts with Barnum & Bailey's circus, the man of the perilous feature act that drew the blood-lusting crowd.

Melville knew all the time what the attraction of his act was for the thousands that came to gape at him and gave him grudging applause when he executed his feat with the artist's sure and safe precision. He understood that he was there to make a Roman holiday. He stared at the gaping faces and knew them to be the same that vented shouts of frightful glee in the arenas of Nero and Titus. Well he realized that nothing would suit the sanguinary instincts of the savage human beasts so well as to see him fall and be dashed to death.

He hated these crowds in his heart, but he kept on smiling and bowing to them with the mummer's weary humor. He had his eye fixed on that competence and that old age in ease and plenty. And he was going to cheat death and the mob to get it.

Two years ago Emil Leandro Melville was 60 years old. He took a look at his bank balance and found it ample. He recalled that he owned a home and lands and a theater at Interlaken, N. Y.; that he had built himself a winter home at Miami, Fla.; that he was the owner of a twenty-ton yacht and that bonds and stocks and mortgages were recorded in his name. He had achieved his goal. At last he was free of the mob and out of death's hands.

So Melville sat down to take his sorely won rest. By way of poetic justice and symbolism, he loaded on the yacht all his performer's paraphernalia, his tights and spangles, everything which had to do with his perilous career. Then he sailed to where the waters are deep. From the bow of his yacht he threw all these memorabilia of his past into the sea. That was the end of his travail and danger.

Melville went home to rest. He sat on the veranda and let the days come and go. He sailed in his yacht and whirled about in his motor and refused to be interested in anything that smelt of effort. He followed Persephone north and south with the seasons. At last he was living and enjoying life.

A little more than a year of this. Then Melville was accosted on a street in Miami by his doctor.

"What's the matter with you, Mel?" asked the physician.

"Nothing. I feel great, Doc," said the old gymnast and balloonist.

"You're a sick man," said the other.

"Who? Me?" demanded Melville.

"Yes, you! Come along to the office."

An examination showed that the old gymnast had gained thirty pounds in that idle year. It revealed other and worse things.

"Melville," said the physician, "you are beginning to suffer from fatty degeneration of the heart. It hits all athletes as soon as they quit training and get fat. You've got to begin exercising hard, and at once, if you don't want to drop dead. If you stay idle and get fatter you're certain to fall in your tracks any day."

"You mean I've got to go to work, Doc?" he pleaded.

"If you want to live long."

"Sentenced to hard labor for life," the frustrated man mumbled. "I've got to work to live."

So Emil Leandro Melville is back in the show business and you may see him again at his terrifying aerial evolutions—a rich man of 62.

"Life didn't gimme a square deal," he said the other night. "There was a gimmick on it from the start and I was the boob that played the game."

Apes in Siam Detect Counterfeit Money

THE people of Siam are very fond of keeping monkeys of various kinds as pets. Owing to their close association with human beings, these creatures become very intelligent. One of the most remarkable things that these monkeys can do is to test money. In Siam, there is a large amount of counterfeit money, perhaps more than in any other country in the world. As a consequence, the lot of the merchant is a difficult one. They have, however, surmounted the trouble to a large extent by making use of apes to test the coins. Sitting by the side of each merchant is to be seen a solemn-faced ape. Every piece of money handed to his master is at once given to the ape. The animal tests the coin with his teeth. If it is good, he throws it into the money box; if it be bad he flings it to the ground. The strange part about the business is that no white person has yet been able to discover how the apes tell the good money from the bad. The merchants politely refuse to explain how the creatures are trained to carry out this useful office. The only sure thing about the affair is that the apes never make a mistake.—From St. Nicholas Magazine.

THE HELPLESS HOLIDAY

BY HUGH MAC NAIR KAHLER

"NOBODY loves you—and your hands are cold. That's all that's wrong with you, Cornelia." Dr. Charlie Brett grinned impudently behind the protection of his seventy-eight years. Miss Lescott regarded him silently. "The cold hands don't matter," he went on, more briskly. "You've been overworking, of course, and your circulation's below par, but that'll take care of itself when you go South, Cornelia. But the other thing"——

"Can't be helped," she interrupted quietly.

He shook his head. "How old are you, Cornelia? I forget."

"Thirty-seven." She managed to rap it out smartly.

"You'll never marry, now—not your type. But your independence doesn't prevent you from needing love—you may not know that, yet, but you'll find it out some day. We're all alike."

"If you mean that I—I'm lonely"——

"Hah! Beginning to notice that there's something missing, in spite of the business and the money and the success? Thought I'd have to argue it with you"——

"You needn't. I know. And I've tried—I can look ahead, Dr. Charlie"——

The half-mischievous twinkle went out of his eyes. "Cornelia, that's the whole trouble. I suppose you went about it as if it were a business proposition, eh? Undertook to make that girl fond of you by"——

"Well, how else could I do it? I thought that if I gave her things I knew she ached for, she'd"——

He shook his head, slowly. "Queer—when you're keen as a knife about most things, too. The more you did for her the better you liked her—and all it got you was thanks!"

She nodded. "I didn't like her, at first. I don't know why I do now. She's absolutely selfish, and as cold as a wet shoe, and yet"——

"And yet you've been wanting to cry because she hasn't taken the trouble to send you a post card since she left, eh? Happened before, hasn't it? Took that other cousin of yours abroad with you, year before last, didn't you?"

Cornelia Lescott nodded. Amy had forgotten her as quickly as Eleanor.

"I can't make people like me. It must be a gift that I don't possess"——

"Rats! You can't make people like you by the methods you'd use to win a buyer's friendship! That's the whole trouble, Cornelia—you're so—so efficient! You made 'em both everlastingly conscious that you were doing things for them. And it takes a pretty broad-gauge human being to love a fairy godmother!"

He leaned his elbows on his desk. "Look here, girl; if you've got any more young female relations, try the other thing on the next one. Give her a chance to manage you. Lean on her. A business is a good thing to love, but it can't love back. You try my method and see if it doesn't work."

Cornelia Lescott smiled thinly as she drove to her office. Twice bitten, thrice shy, she told herself. Amy and Eleanor had taught her that she wasn't the type to attract and hold a girl's affections. The same qualities that had made her a success as a business woman made her a failure at anything else.

The office seemed to echo the assurance as she attacked her day's mail briskly. The big, cheerful room, with its effect of solid accomplishment, welcomed her amiably into the life for which nature must have expressly fashioned her.

Her morning conference with Carewe deepened the impression. It was clear that Carewe regarded her purely as a business personality. She found a gentle satisfaction in his respect; he was competent to judge and he never flattered.

"When do you expect to leave, Miss Lescott?"

His brisk question brought her back to the unwelcome topic. "I'm not sure that I'll go at all," she said, slowly. "Vacations tire me more than work"——

He shook his head decidedly. "That's a mistake, if you'll let me say so. It may tire you more than staying on the job, but it doesn't tire the same muscles and nerves. That's the point. I hope you'll decide to go, as usual."

She guessed that he liked to be left in control. He didn't miss her, she thought. He'd be glad when she went. Probably they all felt the same way. None of them had any feeling about her except as she concerned their material conditions. As a person she simply didn't matter.

"Oh, I suppose I'll go, as usual," she said, listlessly. "It seems like more of a nuisance this year, that's all. I'll let you know when I decide."

He gathered his papers and went out. She plunged into her own work with a sense of escape. After all, there was always the business. It was hers, not merely in the sense of ownership, but by right of creation; she'd built it up from the struggling little plant her father had left behind him. She loved it, she told herself, and it was worth loving, better worth loving than shallow, selfish girls who——

Dr. Charlie's voice seemed to sound in her ears: "You can love a business, all right, but it can't love back . . . and you need something that can."

She sat up straight, her lips tight, a queer stinging sensation in her eyes. She could ask George's eldest girl and see whether there was anything in Dr. Charlie's system. Patience, wasn't it? She must be 19 now. George never could make money, and there were three or four younger children.

She opened a drawer and drew forth a sheet of her personal letter paper. Letters came easily, as a rule, but she found herself phrasing this one mentally, her pen poised and reluctant.

"Dear Patience (no, they'd probably call her Patty at home)—Dear Patty: Don't you want to spend a month or two with me this winter, somewhere in the South? I think you'd enjoy the change"——

Miss Lescott shook her head. The wrong key altogether.

She wrote swiftly, her lips grim. "Dear Patty: I've been ordered South for the winter and I don't want to go alone. I know that you'll find it tiresome to travel with an old woman like me, but if you'll come along I'll be ever so grateful. I expect to go to Cedarhurst for February and March. I'm sure you'll like"——

She shook her head again. Then she inserted a word: "I'm not sure you'll like it there, but it seems the most suitable place for me."

She considered once more. She'd sent Eleanor and Amy checks, with their invitations, to make sure that they'd have no worry about their clothes. Should she do it again? She decided in the negative, added a few words of conventional remembrance to George and his wife, and signed abruptly.

* * * * * * * * *

"Cornelia"—Patience had dispensed with the dutiful prefix of "Cousin" some time during their first hour together—"Cornelia Lescott, do you know what you've done? You've come away without your purse—and the tickets are in it! That's a gorgeous way to begin a trip!"

Cornelia Lescott managed to look decently blank.

"Oh, dear! I left it on the dressing table, where I'd be sure to see it, too. We'll have to go back—and that means we'll miss the train, I suppose"——

"Not this time. I saw it lying there and brought it along." Patience exhibited it.

Cornelia laughed, helplessly. "You'd better carry the tickets, anyway. I seem to be so absent-minded that there's no telling what I'll do with them."

"All right. It would be better, I guess." Patience put the green slips in her own handbag and closed it with a snap. "I was going to, anyway—I can see that things like that worry you, and you're supposed be getting a rest. I like it. I do, really."

She touched Cornelia's wrist lightly. The contact reconciled Cornelia to her duplicity and its penalty. Patience liked her, not as a matter of duty and decency, but spontaneously.

It had not been easy, though, and she felt the effect of the week's masquerade as she leaned back with genuine weariness. The moment she relaxed her vigilant watch upon herself the old habit of authority asserted itself; again and again, as they explored the stores, she had caught that decisive ring in her voice, had stopped in the act of assuming command of the expedition. And she had needed diplomacy, too, to prevent Patience from restocking her wardrobe with absurdly unsuitable things.

As it was, she had yielded a good many times. She could manage to give most of those unsuitable clothes to Patience before their excursion was over, without seeming to be overgenerous.

She compelled herself to stand passively out of the way as Patience commandeered porters and superintended the transfer of their hand luggage to the train.

The Pullman conductor came to them as the train started. Somebody had blundered; the upper berth in their section had been resold, and every inch of space was occupied in the rest of the train. He hated to ask it, but——

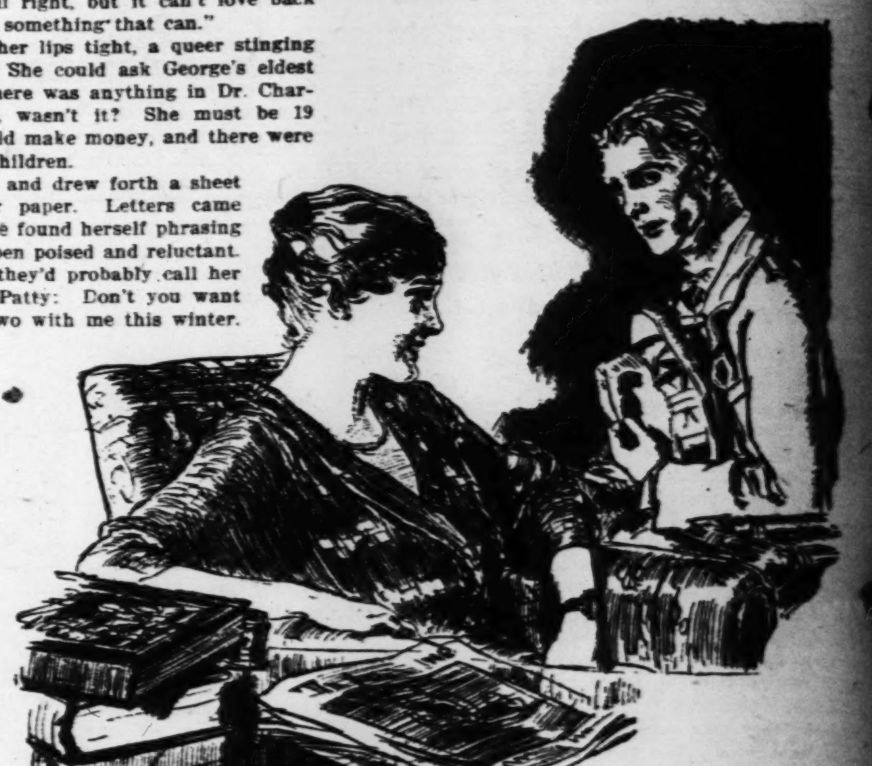
But Patience was too quick for her. "Oh, we'll manage in the lower. When there's such a crowd mistakes are bound to happen."

The rival claimant stood behind the conductor, a tall, tired man, queerly pathetic in his visible embarrassment. She classified him instantly: the type of man which is foredoomed to be bullied and browbeaten by cabmen and waiter and clerk, without protest or resentment.



"I'll go," Jesson said again. "I'm going"—— "Well," said Cornelia sweetly, "well, why don't you?"

"I—I could find room in the day coach," conductor—I'd rather not disturb these ladies"——

"Oh, that's all right." Patience intervened again. "We'll manage perfectly." She changed her seat, leaving the forward one vacant and gestured toward it so compellingly that the matter settled itself. The conductor vanished instantly.

"It's very good of you." The intruder stowed golf bag and suit case clumsily, stumbled over both and apologized, breathlessly—to Patience. Miss Lescott smiled faintly at this; it was evident that even to the eye of the beholder the girl was in charge.

Patience rearranged the man's possessions with brisk efficiency, leaving foot room for all three.

"Thanks." He beamed gratefully. "I suppose I ought to have checked my clubs, but they're so apt to break 'em in the baggage car. And I made most of these myself, so that I'm rather tender of 'em."

Miss Lescott felt her brows lift. If he made golf clubs he must be a professional, little as he resembled those she had encountered. She had the democracy of most business women, but the prospect of sharing a section all the way to Cedarcrest with a man who made his living from a game affronted her, nevertheless.

"You made them?" Patience was instantly interested. "May I see? I never have found a wooden club I liked."

He unlocked the bag, grinning. Miss Lescott herself was aware of a prodding curiosity. Golf clubs always appealed to her mechanical bent. She leaned forward to inspect the driver he exhibited, her brows mounting again. It was a monstrosity, a freak, a huge, misshapen head at the end of a whip-lash shaft.

"My own notion," he explained. "Not much for looks, but the principle's right, I think. Plenty of weight in the head and a whippy shaft—I can get good distance with it when I time the swing right."

He elaborated a violently heretical theory of the golf stroke, illustrating it with other distorted clubs—a brassy even more swollen than his driver, a set of irons over which Miss Lescott shook her head in silent compassion. He wasn't a professional; he belonged at the opposite extreme—an amateur tinker, chasing the will-o'-the-wisp of an eighty with a bagful of freaks. She studied him deliberately.

He must be well past forty; old enough to do something better worth doing than fiddling with golf clubs. Her eye appraised his clothes; he wasn't poor, but neither had he the look of a money getter. Nice manner and a pleasant voice, and a trick of smiling suddenly, in an appeasing fashion, as if to apologize for talking. A time waster, no doubt, but less offensive than most idlers.

"Oh, yes—I generally spend a while down there every winter. It's a good way of resting, and I'd rather do my work when it's warm." She lifted her brows again as he answered Patience's blunt question. He did something then? He had good hands, she saw—lean strong fingers, which moved easily as he gestured. She could see that they were marked with manual labor.

Except for that, he might be a professor of something—but professors couldn't take long vacations in midwinter. A librarian, or a chemist or a writer, maybe—some profession in which he didn't need to be a business man, anyway.

"Lost motion, that's all—pure inefficiency." They had come back to golf, and he was criticising the form of one of Patience's minor divinities. "That tremendous swing is showy, but it doesn't help a bit. I'll show you what I mean when we get on the course"——

By dinner time they had settled down to something like acquaintance; Patience had managed that rather deftly, Miss Lescott conceded. Jesson—the name had a faintly familiar sound, but she could not trace the association. She submitted without protest to the tacit assumption that they share a table. She let the girl order for her. "I hate to decide for myself," she exclaimed. "And Pat's so clever about it."

"Order for three, then." He grinned. "I always lose my way in these cards."

He nodded as Pat issued her commands.

"That's what I'd like to do," he declared. "It must be fine to know just what you want like that."

He must be pretty helpless if he really envied the girl a trivial decisiveness like that. Cornelia discovered presently that he lived at a club. A bachelor—when everything about him fairly shouted that he needed a wife!

A clever woman might have made something of this man, she thought. He was intelligent—the forehead and eyes would have told her so much, without the evidence of his speech. Given a strong incentive and wise, loyal management, he'd have amounted to something better than a winter golfer—probably a duffer, even at that.

She allowed him to pay for the dinner, with only a feeble protest. It amused her to see that Mr. Jesson did not verify the items of the bill, nor count his change, and a dollar was twice too much, by her standards, as a tip.

• • • • • • • •

Overnight, winter fell behind; in the morning they drove through a grove of pines in a clear, amiable sea and caught a glimpse of a golf course, stretching away from the hotel where flowering shrubs threw a bank of yellow and white against the somber evergreens.

Cornelia was able to hold her tongue while Patience inspected three suites, bargained cleverly over rates and ordered breakfast for both. She even submitted to a decree which relegated her to a negligee and a pile of pillows while Patience unpacked all the trunks.

"I say, Cornelia"—— Patience interrupted an incipient drowsiness.

"Yes?"

"I've just realized why I'm having such a good time with you. I—I didn't expect to, you know."

She flushed under Miss Lescott's questioning gaze.

"I—I was afraid you'd be bossy—Amy said something that gave me that idea, I guess. But you aren't—you've let me run things. I love it, you know, and at home they just can't get it through their heads that I'm grown up. You"—she kissed Cornelia's cheek—you're just a dear."

Cornelia Lescott set her teeth on a renewed resolution. She could feign helplessness all winter, she thought, if it paid its dividends in such coinage.

• • • • • • • •

It was a very little frown—no more than the flicker of a shadow across Humphrey Jesson's burned face, but Cornelia Lescott saw and translated it. It was natural enough, she conceded tolerantly. Her careful dependence on Pat's blithe capability interfered with Jesson's plans rather often. It was clearly interfering now, while he waited for Pat to finish untangling the intricate confusion of Cornelia's check book before starting for the links.

Miss Lescott was quite willing to interfere, a little, with the progress of an intimacy which sometimes worried her.

Jesson was perfectly harmless, to be sure. She distinctly liked him, in spite of his manifest shortcomings as a person of affairs. He made her think of a boy, overtaken unawares by the sly years, a boy who had never found time to grow up. But he wouldn't do for Pat.

The change enabled Cornelia to develop a number of disabilities which would have been wasted in the inn itself, and gave Patience the agreeable sensations of managing a house, with none of its penalties. It incidentally provided Humphrey Jesson with a comfortable place in which to spend most of his evenings and occasional rainy afternoons.

"I can't possibly finish this in time to play this afternoon." Pat spoke crisply, with an energetic jerk of her bobbed head. "You two run along without me—I can't add straight when you're here, even if you don't whisper.

Miss Lescott watched Jesson's face. It puzzled her to observe that he brightened before he frowned. She could have laughed at the visible conflict of emotions, however.

It was pathetically clear that he wished to insist on Pat's coming and saw no way of managing it without seeming ungallant toward her hostess.

"Oh—that's too bad—a great day like this! Better come along and straighten out the checks tonight. Don't you think so, Miss Lescott?"

Pat abolished them both with a sweeping, backward gesture of her left hand. "Nine and eight are seventeen and six is twenty-four—no—oh, run along and play! I'm busy!"

Jesson's face diverted Cornelia so that she longed to laugh outright. He was trying so hard to look pleased!

• • • • • • • •

"Your cousin's a wonderful girl, Miss Lescott." He spoke wistfully as they struck through the pines toward the clubhouse. "I've never met any other girl who had that faculty of decision as completely developed as she—she always knows exactly what she wants and exactly how to get it." He sighed. "It's a great thing—I envy it in her because it's so entirely lacking in me."

Cornelia was suddenly sorry for him; he was more boyish than ever.

"You're in luck, Miss Lescott," he went on. "You and I are a lot alike, don't you think? I—I mean"—— He flushed and stumbled, suddenly self-conscious. "I mean that we both seem to—to lean on stronger characters. I've noticed how you"——

"I suppose there's a certain resemblance," she admitted, good-naturedly, checking an impulse to enlighten him.

He came back to the topic as they left the tee.

"I keep thinking what a splendid wife she'll make some lucky chap," he told her. "A girl like that could do anything she pleased with a fellow, I suppose."

"Oh, she'll never have a chance to escape." He paused to play a gloomy brassy shot to the edge of the green. "A girl like that"——

"Don't be too sure." Cornelia spoke tartly. "Men don't like competent women." Her voice tightened. "They're all alike in that—it's the silly sort they lose their heads about."

"There's something in that." He nodded soberly. "I suppose it's natural enough, too. The sillier a girl is the better a man looks to himself. But I think you're wrong about your cousin, all the same."

"It doesn't matter much. She'll never be willing to submerge her individuality." She spoke with finality and he dropped the subject as abruptly as he had introduced it. They talked golf for a dozen holes. The quality of his game irritated her; a man with such outrageous form had, she felt, no right to score threes and fours.

"If I'd married a girl like that twenty years ago, I'd be a different animal," he announced suddenly. "Makes me feel as if I'd missed the whole target, somehow. Just puttered at things all my life." He glowered at his driver. "Look at that club; took me a year to get it balanced! If I'd had the right sort of wife she'd have put her foot down hard on that sort of thing."

Cornelia Lescott laughed.

"I suppose it does sound funny." He grinned ruefully. "But I can't help thinking I'd have done something if I'd had the luck to"——

She laughed again. "That's a refreshing variation on the Adam theme, at least. What would you have done if you'd been prevented from whittling out those—those shillalahs?" She and Pat had wondered about his business—if he really had one. It was queer that he never talked about it himself. Pat thought that he must be ashamed of it. Cornelia asked the question now on impulse, anxious merely to change the subject.

"Oh, I don't know. Invented something else, I suppose—something useful and sensible, with a pot of money in it, like the lathe." He grinned. "I got more fun out of making those clubs, though"——

The lathe? Her mind sped along a suddenly opened avenue of associations. The Jesson lathe!

"Why—why, you"—— She caught herself up sharply, remembering just in time. If Pat didn't see the inconsistency between Cornelia Lescott who owned and managed the biggest factory in Lake City and the Cousin Cornelia who couldn't keep her check stubs straight, the discrepancy would be plain enough to others.

"You're an inventor, then?" she finished. "How interesting! Tell me about it—I've always thought it must be wonderful"——

He shrugged and wagged his head. "Oh, there's nothing to tell. I just fiddle at things, and now and then there's a lucky idea. Let's forget it—I don't want to begin thinking again. If I do, I'll have to go home and tackle that—a scheme I was working on when I knocked off."

She played her second shot, thoughtfully, into a

yawning sand pit. That Jesson! And she'd taken it for granted that he was insignificant. Random recollection came back to her; there was a die press which bore his name, too. She watched his play with a sudden respect; it wasn't a combination of eccentricity and luck now, but a pure science, with reason behind every seeming absurdity.

"No wonder you wanted to make your own clubs," she said, as they met at the green. "And I'm not surprised any more that you can use them!"

He turned toward her with a glow in his look. "It's just my old monomania, you know. Lost motion. I hate it—wherever I see it I just have to drop what I'm doing and see whether there's a way of cutting it out." He sank a long putt and repeated his wistful head shake.

"That's why I've been glooming over my wasted years," he went on. "Somehow, since I've been down here, I've felt as if they'd been lost motion and nothing else."

She could understand now. It was Pat, of course—the sheer abundant youth of her, that vivid, eager life she seemed to radiate—it came suddenly home to Cornelia Lescott that Pat made her, too, feel old and futile, as if all those busy, fruitful years had been, as Jesson said, lost motion. No wonder he wanted her——

She met his eyes and was puzzled by the sudden purpose in them. If Humphrey Jesson wanted Pat, she thought, he'd get her!

"That was fine," he said. "Let's have another round some time."

She liked that. He didn't forget his manners. She made up her mind to help if she could.

* * * * * * * *

"I thought he must be something like that." Pat took the news calmly. "I found out where you went wrong—you just added that Michael check instead of subtracting it." She exhibited the balanced book.

"But you don't realize, Pat—he's not just an ordinary inventor"——

"They're none of them that, are they?" Pat pressed a frank yawn back into place. "He's good fun, anyway." She struggled with another yawn. "Figures always make me sleepy. Better let me enter your checks after this. It'll save work in the end." She chuckled. "You old dear!"

Cornelia heard her singing as she dressed. It irritated her that Pat couldn't grasp the significance of Humphrey Jesson's identity. Of course, machinery was just machinery to Pat, but the impossibility of making her understand exasperated Cornelia. It would be a pity if, after all, Pat couldn't appreciate the man's bigness. She'd have to find a way of bringing it home to her.

She tried, very diplomatically, at dinner, but the girl seemed to regard her enthusiasm as an amiable eccentricity.

"You and your precious machines! What's a lathe, anyway? I know you want to talk about it. Go on."

Cornelia did her best. "I see," said Pat presently. "Do look at that dress, Cornelia—no, the blue. Isn't it lucky we can't see ourselves?"

Cornelia gave it up. After all, she reflected, a girl didn't judge a man by what he had done, but by what he was. Jesson's lathe couldn't mean anything to Pat, even if she could be made to understand it.

"He's awfully nice, too," she ventured. "I really enjoyed my game. And I understand those long drives of his now. There's nothing accidental about them."

"He does hit a mean ball with that dinky little swing," conceded Pat. "Let's go home—I don't feel like dancing tonight."

She hesitated in the living room door. "Is Mr. Jesson coming over?"

"I suppose so. He didn't say anything"——

"Then I'm going to bed now! I'd never last out the evening, and it would be sort of pointed if I dropped asleep in my chair. You and he can have a gorgeous wallow in machines."

Her door closed firmly on Cornelia's protests, and Jesson's brief tap seemed to come as a feeble echo. He ran an inquiring glance about the room. Cornelia was sorry for him.

"Pat's in bed—she tired herself out over that checkbook, I'm afraid."

"I'm—I'm sorry. I mean that I'm sorry she's tired." He fumbled with his hat. "Perhaps I'd better not stop—I mean perhaps you're tired, too."

She bit back the smile. He was so comically like a boy, in these desperate snatches at the polite remark.

"Not a bit. Take that chair and an extra cushion or two."

"I—I can't stay but a minute." He was so patently eager to escape that she felt a faint stirring of resentment. Of course, he was disappointed about Pat, but he needn't show it quite so plainly.

"Oh, you mustn't let me keep you, of course"—— She couldn't wholly soften the tone. He opened startled eyes.

"I'll go if I'm in the way. I do hang around here a lot, I know."

"We're always glad to have you come"——

He rejected the idea with a short, harsh laugh.

"I'll go," he said again. "I'm going"——

"Well," said Cornelia, sweetly. "Well, why don't you?"

She caught her breath as she heard the speech. What on earth had made her say that? Even if Humphrey Jesson was behaving like a sulky boy—

He glared at her. "Why? Because—because I can't! Don't you see I can't?"

"Why can't you?" She thought he must have gone suddenly insane.

He flung his arms wide and high, a gesture of absolute helplessness.

"Why?" He choked on the word. "That's why!"

* * * * * * * *

Cornelia Lescott sprang free, her hand pressed against a cheek which had been—incredibly—kissed. For an instant she was furiously angry. Then, as suddenly, she was not angry at all.

"I couldn't help it—I just couldn't." He repeated the helpless gesture. "Why didn't you stop me—why didn't you keep that child awake till I got away"——

"I thought you—I thought it was Pat"——

Somewhere, far back in her rocking brain, the Cornelia Lescott she knew raged at this contemptible woman who could only stare and prattle.

"Pat! That hard-headed, common-sense little—little—— I'd be likely to lose my head about her, wouldn't I? Not me! Live to be forty years old and go plumb raving crazy about you! The most absolutely helpless woman I ever met!"

"Oh!" Bound and gagged, that inner Cornelia writhed at the inane sound. "Oh!"

He exploded in a bubbling laugh. "Well, you can't ever say I wasn't original about it! Quaint thing in the proposal way, wasn't it! Cornelia—who ever thought of calling you that, anyway? A knife name, for a cream and cushion woman like you! Cornelia—you're perfect! You're the compressed quintessence of the absolute feminine and I've loved you and hunted for you all my life! I didn't want to find you—I knew I'd never have a ghost of a chance"——

"Wait—wait!" Cornelia tugged vainly at hands which caught and held her wrists. "You—it's all a misunderstanding—you think I'm—and I'm not. I'm Cornelia Lescott—C. S. Lescott, president of Lescott & Co. I've been pretending—oh, please, let go"——

The hands tightened. "Say that again!" It was quite a new voice now. The ring of command in it frightened her. It wasn't altogether unpleasant to be frightened, she thought.

"You don't want me. I'm—I'm just a sham—I'm probably the most efficient woman in the State! You'll hate me"——

"There's no sense in it!" His forehead wrinkled pathetically. "What's the use of pretending a thing like that—letting that kid do your breathing for you?"

Suddenly she was telling him the whole story, in a shameless, stumbling rush of words.

"I wanted somebody to like me"——

She tried again to free her hands. "Don't you see it yet? I'm not real—you don't know"——

He laughed again. "And I've been breaking myself to bits to keep from loving you—because I didn't dare risk marrying somebody as perfectly helpless as I am. I've been using Pat as a life preserver for weeks and weeks! I've been making myself compare her with you. 'You fool!' I'd say to myself, 'don't you see that that's the kind of a woman you need?' And then I'd look at you and—and"——

He stopped. "Wanted somebody to like you, eh! Well, I guess you've brought it on yourself! Don't ever blame me"——

"I won't," said Cornelia Lescott, solemnly.

Upper Yosemite Fall Is World's Highest Unbroken Leap of Water

DR. F. E. MATTHIS of the United States Geological Survey, whose long studies in the Yosemite region of California led him to collect statistics about waterfalls the world over, writes to Science that there is no question that the Yosemite Falls are the highest known.

"The Kaieteur Falls, in British Guiana, which are reported to be 804 feet high, are probably the highest of their peculiar class—the class of broad, voluminous cataracts to which the Niagara Falls, the Victoria Falls and several others belong. The Wooloomumbi, on a branch of Macleay River, Australia, is about 900 feet high, but its volume is so much smaller that it scarcely belongs to this class," he writes.

"The highest waterfalls in the world are of the slender 'bridal veil' type. Among them the Yosemite Falls appear to stand foremost. The entire chain of falls and cascades which the waters of Yosemite Creek make in their descent from the upland to the floor of the Yosemite Valley is 2565 feet high. The individual measurements are: Upper fall, 1430 feet; intermediate cascade, 815 feet; lower fall, 320 feet.

"It is to be noted that, even if the cascades be ruled out, the Upper Yosemite Fall, taken by itself, still remains far in the lead as the highest single, unbroken leap of water in the world. This leap measures 1360 feet in height.

"There is, so far as I can ascertain, only one waterfall that exceeds the Upper Yosemite in height—the Sutherland Fall in New Zealand. It measures 1904 feet in height, but it is broken about midway by projecting ledges and makes no clear leap of more than 900 feet.

"The falls of Gavarnie, in the Pyrenees, are, according to some authorities, 1385 feet high, but they consist of braided streamlets that slide down the seams of an irregularly sculptured cliff and do not fall clear through any notable height."

Now that hair specialists are agreed that the beginning of baldness is the gradual thinning out of the hair and that that is due to a microbe in the scalp. It was not difficult for science to overcome it. So it is now possible to stop thinning out of the hair, falling hair, baldness, gray hair, bald patches, itchy, scaly dandruff and other such afflictions of the hair and scalp. The new method strengthens the hair roots and follicles, makes the scalp healthy and sanitary and puts life, gloss and lustre into the old and growing hair. La-may Face Powder is Guaranteed Pure and Harmless.
Pure face powder cannot injure the most delicate baby skin. The trouble is, too many powders are made in the old-fashioned way, with rice powder. Rice powder is starchy, and, like bread flour, it is quickly turned into a gluey paste by the moisture of the skin. This paste clogs the cuticle, swells in the pores, causing enlarged pores, blackheads and rice powder irritations. A specialist makes a harmless powder by using an ingredient doctors prescribe to heal the skin. Every time you apply this improved powder you give your complexion a real beauty treatment. There is a thousand dollar guarantee of purity printed on the box, certifying it does not contain white lead, rice powder or any harmful substance. This guaranteed pure powder is called La-may (French, Poudre L'Ame). Because it is pure and because it stays on, La-may is now used by over a million American women; it is now the most popular complexion powder sold in New York. Women who have used even the most expensive face powders say they cannot buy better powder than La-may anywhere at any price.

This Man Could Have Cooked for Noah's Ark

Chef at Bronx Zoo who prepares meals for 3000 animals says food must be cooked as carefully for them as for humans—Elephants, for instance, eat a great deal of bread—Monkeys demand plenty of potatoes—Dried flies for the birds must be imported.

THE cook of Noah's Ark had nothing on Rudolph H. Bell, who concocts dishes for more than 3000 animals at the Bronx Zoo, in New York City. Not many people know that animals eat cooked food. They surely didn't in their natural state. But, since it is impossible to import the natural food of the zoo inhabitants, they must be adjusted to an approximate diet—and that's where Rudolph Bell comes in.

Bell has been cooking food for animals of all species, including the human, for thirty years, twenty-four of which have been spent at the Bronx Zoo. He was born in Germany forty-nine years ago. His father wanted him to become a forester. Rudolph, however, did not feel the call of the cool woods. Somehow he preferred the cleaver and the stove. It was a curious ambition for a youth, but part of it was obstinacy. He wanted to be a cook, and when his father objected too strenuously Rudolph ran away to America. He was thirteen years old. The first thing he did in this country was to apprentice himself to a butcher. Then gradually he learned the art of cooking. For ten years he wandered over the United States, cooking in lumber and cowpunchers' camps. For a while he worked for Cody's Buffalo Bill Circus. It was here that he first started cooking for animals. When Bell went to the Bronx Zoo there were about a half-dozen animals on exhibition.

"I used to go down to the butcher every morning and get a pound of meat. We had an anteater who required chopped meat for his meals. You can imagine the difference now when we use from four to five hundred pounds of meat a day!" Bell was telling his story in his neat, well-equipped kitchen behind the administration buildings. He is a large, heavy man, with capable arms, who enunciates thickly.

"I was also warden at that time and helped feed the animals. The zoo grew larger and larger. We soon had buffaloes and bears, and it was with these that I had my first thrilling experiences. At one time [illegible], the sloth bear, bent the bars of his cage and escaped. He made for the park restaurant, where I happened to be at the moment. The bear immediately began eating whatever food lay around. I attacked him with a chair; he turned on me, and chased me around the room, wrecking the place. At last I reached a closet where I knew a shotgun was kept. The bear reached me as I grabbed the gun. I fell, and as I fell I fired. This gave me a short respite, and I was able to blaze away till the bear was killed.

"My other experience was even more hazardous. A calf of one of the bison smashed her leg and was being zealously guarded by the mother. It was necessary to get the calf away in order to afford it some relief. But the mother was in an ugly mood and threatened everyone who entered the inclosure. The warden called for volunteers and I responded. I entered the inclosure without weapons and made for the calf and the buffalo made for me. I circled and picked up the calf, who was lying on the ground, bleating with pain, slung it over my shoulder and ran toward the gate. The mother chased me and overtook me. She bucked me and I was thrown heavily to the ground. But as I was near the gate the calf was snatched away by one of the keepers and I followed. I was laid up with cuts and bruises for several weeks.

FRANK HANLEY

"Since I've confined my activities to cooking, nothing very unusual has happened. There are over 3000 animals in the park I either butcher or cook food for, and that has kept me busy. The variety of food is large, from the split-hoof animals, who eat nothing but hay and vegetables, to the primates, who eat almost everything a human does. I have to make custard pies, cocoa and biscuits for them when they are a trifle off their feed. And I have to be as exact in my cooking as I would have to be in cooking for men. Animals must have good food or they die. People are sometimes astonished to see the amount of good fruits and vegetables we use. They think anything will do for animals. But that isn't so.

"Most of the cooking I do here is for the primates. They require a lot of potatoes. The birds consume a good deal of boiled rice. Then there are stews and vegetables. My biggest job is dividing up the meat, which I do every morning. The cat animals are fed fifteen pounds of meat apiece a day. The elephants are of course, our most voracious eaters. One is fed three hundred pounds of hay daily. Bread is another one of our big food items. We use about four hundred pounds a day. The elephants eat most of that.

"The reptiles go heavy on mice, frogs and insects. We raise those in our nursery. Some boys around the section make a business of catching frogs and rats for us.

"Dried flies is another curious food we use. Mr. Mitchell, the chief clerk, who does the ordering, tells me he had to send to England for those. Apparently no United States firm is ambitious enough to prepare dried flies. We use a good deal of ground bone for the young birds. This we prepare ourselves. We raise a species of turnip known to us as 'mangels' in the nursery. This is one of our chief winter foods when vegetables are dear.

"Buying for the zoo requires a good deal of knowledge about the food markets. After all, we have only so much to spend, and we have to buy when prices are advantageous. But, market or no market, we must never neglect to get the food, whether it is watermelons for the tortoises or dried flies for the birds."

WATER AND OUR BODILY HEALTH

By DR. EDWIN E. SLOSSON

THIS is the season of the year when we appreciate the fact that our bodily substance is mostly composed of water. Lucky for us that it is, for water is not only the most abundant, but the most even tempered of liquids. It is slowest to cool and, what is of more interest just now, it is slowest to heat. It is this thermal conservation of water, otherwise known as its specific heat, that keeps us going regardless of the weather.

For we can only live within the narrow range of two degrees Fahrenheit, and it requires a delicate adjustment of the mechanism to maintain that temperature as we roam from the equator to the pole, or as the climates of these regions alternately roam over those of us who live in the North Temperate Zone.

It is water that keeps all parts of the body at the same temperature in all weathers by circulation, and then in hot weather like this reduces the temperature by evaporation. As a man on a pleasure excursion has to put a bill into his pocket from time to time to compensate for the sum imperceptibly evaporated in small change, so we require frequent invoices of water to keep up with increasing retail outgo. The body in summer time is a steam engine, constantly taking advantage of the high rate of exchange between liquid and gas.

For water is twice blessed. It gives a blessing as it comes and as it goes. And the latter is the greater, though we are not grateful for it. We appreciate the coolness of a glass of icewater, but it does us fifteen times as much good afterward as it escapes through a million pores. A cup of hot tea also may cool us off, for it takes away with it in evaporation from the skin fifty times as much heat as it brought us.

Water is really what is wanted, although we add various flavors, call it by various names, and charge various prices for it. And it does not matter much what its initial temperature is, it will serve its purpose just the same. The only important thing is to get enough of it at all times, before meals, after meals, between meals and at meals. One can hardly get too much of it, but one usually gets too little.

The regulation of the strength of the various fluids of the body is as nicely adjusted as the equilibrium of temperature. But both are dependent upon an abundant supply of water. An excess can be easily disposed of, but a deficiency upsets the machinery. A pound of water a day is about what the body can manufacture in its internal laboratory from the hydrogen of the food and the oxygen of the air, but this is not nearly enough to run it. The automobilist cools down his combustion cylinder by wrapping it with water and keeping this in rapid circulation. We also are propelled by an engine using food as fuel in much the same way and we use the same device to prevent overheating.

But we have to evaporate the water to get the full cooling effect, and this tends to dry us up, to make mummies of us, to leave us stranded for want of water.

Our thirst is thus the longing of the salt that is left behind for the water that has departed. It is a sort of homesickness, a longing for an ancestral habitat. For Venus Anadyomene is a verified myth. All life sprang from the sea. And the tide that ebbs and flows through our heart is composed of much the same elements as the ocean from which it was originally dipped.

Like Another Pompeii Is Pyramid Found in Mexico

DISCOVERY of an archaic pyramid, buried thousands of years ago beneath volcanic ash in the San Cuicuilco Hill near Mexico City, pushes human history in America back many centuries and indicates that the early populations of this land began the mastery of the material universe [illegible] them probably quite as soon as did the primitive peoples surrounding the Mediterranean Sea, according to Dr. Byron Cummings, director of the Arizona State Museum. He has charge of the excavations now being made by the Mexican Government.

This ancient structure, found by Dr. Cummings in collaboration with Dr. Manuel Gamio, director of anthropology and archeology of Mexico, is composed of blocks of unhewn volcanic rock and rises in four terraces, with inclined walls, from a base approximately [illegible] feet in diameter to a height of about 100 feet. It has not yet been uncovered sufficiently to determine the measurements more exactly.

"As in old Pompeii, the mighty forces of nature [illegible] and sealed the handiwork of man, that it might speak to future generations," says Dr. Cummings, "so here lava from the ancient Ajusco volcano has preserved a chapter of human history, although more primitive, yet not less interesting than the worn pavements and marble peristyles of the ancient city of the Italian coast.

"Cuicuilco is an illustration of one of the first pyramids reared by the ancestors of those tribes who adorned Mexico not only with mighty pyramids, but also with richly decorated temples and palaces before the first century of our era. This crude pyramid, unembellished and unadorned, yet massive and solid, stands a mute evidence that the native American developed his masterful architecture here on American soil.

"The excavations show that this massive structure had been covered with volcanic mud and ashes so long before its final burial by the lava from the Ajusco cone that at that time abundant vegetation was growing on it.

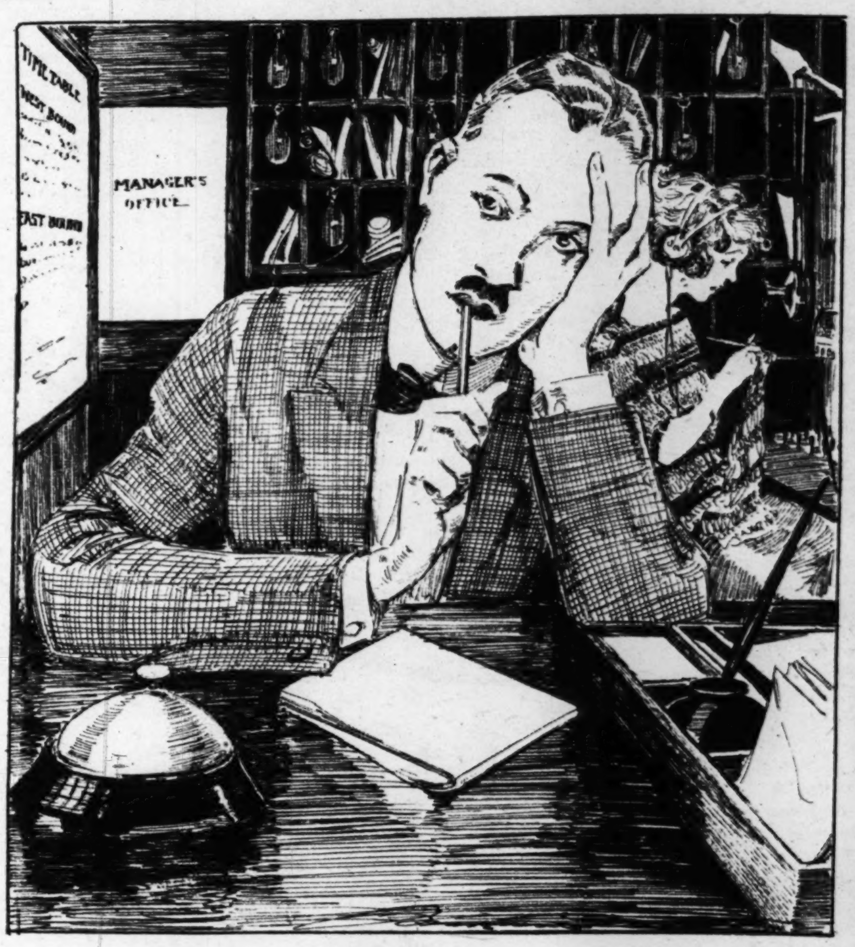
"When we consider that this pyramid must have been built before some great eruption in the vicinity sent forth its deluging shower of ashes, mud and pumice, and that this calamity occurred long before the flow from Ajusco, which careful calculation places between two and three thousand years ago; that no polished stone implements are found; that the stone implements are grinding and polishing stones, flaked knives, borers and scrapers; that the pottery even near the surface is crude and archaic, and that the entire structure contains no hewn stone and no cement or plaster in any form, we realize that architecture had its beginning in Mexico long before the Christian era.

"How long were the people of Cuicuilco in developing the ability to rear this massive pyramid? Through how many centuries had this American branch of the human family struggled before they gained sufficient mastery of material things and sufficient social and political co-operation and organization to produce such results? How many centuries elapsed between the building of Cuicuilco and the ornate pyramid of Quetzalcoatl at Teotihucan, which Dr. Gamio estimates was built before the first century, A. D.?"

THE REVIVAL OF THE VILLAGE INN

Automobiles and good roads have stimulated tourist travel and increased the range of observation of the hotel clerk—He sees many funny things these days and some of the travelers' costumes remind him of a circus parade—The drummer is still the most talkative guest, but gives the least trouble — Vagaries of the "touring maniac" who sees nothing but his milage record. -:- -:-

By A COUNTRY HOTEL CLERK



PROFESSIONAL jokesmiths are always pulling something on the country hotel, but the country hotel never had a chance for a comeback. It is about time the village inn had its innings.

The small-town hotel is different from a city hotel. The city hotel is elaborate and imposing; it has hundreds and even thousands of rooms; it has a mezzanine floor, a ball room, a blue room, a green room, a manager of this and a manager of that, and rates as imposing as the structure.

The country hotel is different. Having only a small number of rooms, there is no need of being so elaborate. Instead, the country hotel strives to be simple, cozy and homelike.

A difference in patronge is another distinction. Each city hotel caters to a certain class—as families or tourists or drummers. A provincial hotel keeper cannot afford to discriminate; he must cater to all classes. Therefore he has a hard job pleasing his patrons. One man kicks because the price is too high while another man kicks because the price is too low and the room is not good enough for him.

Although the small-town innkeeper has to contend with all classes, there are two which never fail him—the traveling salesman all the year round and the tourist in season. The small hotel preceded the larger by a good many centuries. The earliest approximation to an inn was found in the caravanseries of the East. They were unfurnished lodging houses, usually belonging to the state or a mosque, in which caravans and merchants might spend the night. It is interesting to note that such was the "inn" from which Joseph and Mary were turned away on account of a "full house." The result was the Christ was born in a manger and not in a caravansary.

Under the Roman Empire lodging places began to appear along the main routes of travel and were known as diversoria or stabularia. Horace describes one of these places in his "Satires," the first of innumerable satires on the country hotel. These houses were the result of increased travel and increased travel was the result of the famed Roman roads. What has affected travel has affected hotels as well, for the last twenty centuries.

The next force to affect travel was religion, in the form of pilgrimages to the holy shrines. This led to the Crusades and the founding of the Hospitalers. Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales" pictures the religious travelers of this period.

The Crusades are important in the development of the hotel because they started the common people to traveling, a habit which they still have. Two modern inventions rank with the Crusades as a stimulant for travel, the railway and the automobile.

With the rise of the universities, student travel in search of knowledge spread. It is said that the stagecoach was the direct result of student travel. With this movement came the true inn, the old English tavern called the Blue Pig or the Pink Duck. In the eighteenth century these places played no little part in English literature as the reading of Steele and Addison will show.

In the nineteenth century traveling and hotels, side by side, advanced with startling rapidity. With increase in travel caused by the railway came America's second contribution, the mammoth and palatial, metropolitan hotel. The modern hotel system dates from, progressed with and depends on the railroad. Now can the automobile displace the railway and bring back its prosperity to the village inn?

Railroad lines go from city to city, while automobiles go from village to village. This new mode of travel will not affect city hostelries much, but its effect on country hotels is felt more and more every day. More people are traveling by auto every year. The obvious result of this is that more city accommodations and comforts are found in small towns.

By reason of its complexity the general public is hard to please. You can please all some of the time and some all of the time, but you cannot please all of them all the time. It can't be done, that's all. My experience in a Nebraska country hotel has taught me this.

It is unpleasant to discuss that minority of our patronage which we are unable to please, but I might as well have it over with. One bugaboo of the country hotel is the show troupe. Shows that make one-night stands are about on their last legs anyway. I've found, too, that when theatrical managers run off with the payroll, it doesn't only happen in the "movies," or in dime novels. A dozen or so financially embarrassed, hard-boiled actors and actresses are not the pleasantest guests a hotel would desire.

Women, as a general rule, are harder to please than men. Men have simple tastes and simple wants. Women are more fastidious and are therefore harder to get along with.

Happily, disagreeable guests form a small minority. The guests we cater to are overwhelmingly in the majority.

The good, old-fashioned peddler, more civilly known as the traveling salesman or commercial traveler, is the guest every small-town hotel wants. He is sought for and catered to because he composes eighty per cent of all our trade. He is popular also because he does not require any fuss or frills. He wants good, wholesome food and a good, clean bed. Of course, there are a few variations.

Another advantage of the commercial trade is that there are men on the road twelve months every year. Tourists only swarm in hot weather. As proof of the popularity of the traveling man, it will be noticed that about every tenth country hotel is named the Commercial or Merchant.

The automobile, too, has come to the aid of the commercial traveler. Formerly he was forced to travel by rail, thus wasting his company's time and money by waiting for trains, doubling back, and passing up towns. But with an auto, usually belonging to his firm, he can come and go at his own convenience. More than half of the salesmen travel by auto up our way, and the percentage is growing each year.

The commercial traveler, also has his humorous human-nature side. Whatever may be his ranking in other indoor sports, he certainly excels in one. He can take first prize in a gabfest. I really believe that traveling salesmen as a class are the most talkative of male creatures. He can discuss, intelligently or otherwise, anything from Wall street finance to the intimate and suppressed details of the latest movie scandal. His tongue is his fortune.

Although modern hotels are highly commercialized, they are not lacking in human interest and occasionally in romance. Travelers are as varied and as interesting today as they were when Chaucer portrayed them in his famous gallery of characters in the "Canterbury Tales." Some aspiring author would do well to modernize the "Tales."

We sometimes have guests with no apparent business in town at all. They do not know anyone and no one knows them. They eat, sleep and read; they do everything to pass the time but work. They may stay a week or a day. Apparently they avoid cities and they seem to be hiding from somebody or something. If they would, they could probably tell some interesting stories. But it is still a mystery why they want to spend their time at a country hotel with nothing to do.

It is natural that travelers should ask questions, foolish and otherwise. Three questions asked most frequently of the country hotel clerk are:

"Who is the young lady?"

"When does the mail go east?"

"Where can I find a movie house?"

Ninety-nine per cent of the guests ask for a poolhall or a theater. Only three persons in two years asked me for the public library. One of those was a minister.

An official of one of th national highways, speak ing to a body of hotel me said:

"In fifteen days we ha 963 interstate cars over ou road. These people aver aged three and one-fourth persons to each car, and spent $12 for actual necessary traveling expens for every 135 miles."

This means that every day on this highway touris spend more than $700 in going 135 miles. This i one highway only. The West is a network of high ways. More travel, more business. That is why th country hotel is passing from the "bowl-and-pitcher" stage to the "telephone-and-elevator" period.

When the travel bug bites, he bites everybody. There is no discrimination as to age, sex, nationality or occupation. All ages travel, from 8 weeks to 8 years. Everybody is on the go, from a farmer in a Ford, who ought to be home working, to a millionaire in a Packard going to Reno.

And the way they dress. Ye Gods! They are enough to make a circus calithumpian throw a jealous fit.

The conventional khaki for men and women is al right, but they do not stop at that. The women balk. They want something more stylish. They doll up i fifty-seven kinds of knickers, with bare knees and go stockings. Gosh, you ought to be up here in the touris season!

Some tourists travel in limousines, with a high-cl chauffeur. Others, of small means but great ambi tions, rig up a member of the family and try to pas him off as their chauffeur.

One type of tourist has a little money, a second-han auto and a starved desire to travel. He might be calle a "travel maniac."

Just after dark he pulls his five-passenger Ford u in front of the hotel. He and his wife pile out, fo lowed by six or seven children, ranging from 2 to 1 years old. They proceed then to unload their ba gage—four or five suit cases and sometimes even trunk.

Then they come straggling in, dirty, hungry an tired. He registers for two double rooms "for the wi and the kids." The wife in the meantime is busy try ing to keep the children from crying.

The "maniac," undaunted by his family's fatigu hunger or lack of sanitation, chatters on:

"Say, I sure hit some bad roads back there a wa Gosh, they were terrible! Had a bum day, too. Onl made 283 miles. Made 289 yesterday. Better call u at 4 in the morning. Want to get an early start. Be lieve I can make 300 miles tomorrow. Well, good-nigh Don't forget to call us."

They get to bed about 10 o'clock. At 4 a. m. they a up and gone. They drive till 9 in the evening, sixtee hours. When they get back to their own native haml his friends will ask him what he saw. "Oh, I didn' notice the scenery much," he'll say, "but between J ville and Doughnut Center I bet the old bus was maki sixty per."

There is one type of tourist the hotel has little t do with. This is the camping variety. Besides fin ing it cheaper to camp, they seem to enjoy the novel of it. Towns all over the nation realize the importan of this trade and have provided municipal campi grounds.

You say this should hurt hotel business. With beating about the bush any, we will admit it does. B the wise hotel keeper does not antagonize the camp grounds. Rain is a great asset to the hotel. Ra makes bad roads and bad camping grounds.

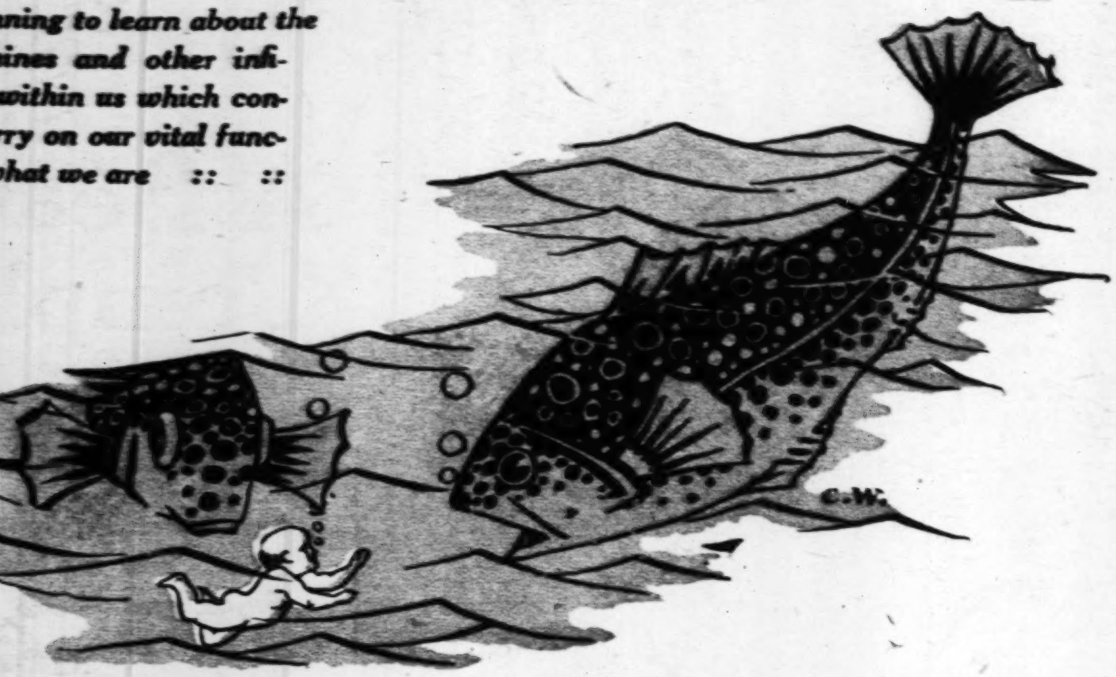
MICROSCOPIC RULERS -- OF OUR LIVES --

We are only just beginning to learn about the chromosomes, vitamines and other infinitely small objects within us which control our heredity, carry on our vital functions, and make us what we are :: ::



By DR. WITHROW MORSE,

Professor of Physics in the University of West Virginia

WHEN Tom became a water baby, in Charles Kingsley's delightful story, the first that happened was that he became very small. Nowadays, science requires that things be served up in small parcels if it is to be called upon to make out what is really happening. Great things are left to the magnates of oil and of steel, but when it comes to trying to find out why brown hair and brown eyes follow from a mating of the blue eyes of the Saxon and the black eyes of the Mediterranean coast, you must turn to the infinitely small. If your problem is to decipher what is bringing about influenza, you must direct your attention to the tiny, again. If you are interested in why children fed upon malted milk, without good, wholesome cow's milk or its equivalent, are so often weaklings, you must again turn to the small things.

It is the small things that the scientiest deals with wherever you find him at work; for if he is not at it now, he will be before his work is over on almost any problem.

Let us take the matter of heredity. It is an extraordinary thing to find that whatever is going on in this process you have to turn to things so small that your unaided eye will not see them. These things having to do with heredity are the tiny bodies known to the scientist as "chromosomes," which is just the Greek way of saying "colored bodies." Where are they? Everywhere that you find life. They are not colored in their living condition, as a matter of fact, but only when the scientist puts salt upon their tails to bring them to his notice. He has found that if you add certain coal tar dyes you bring out these little fellows; it requires a hundred or more placed side by side before you can see them with your naked eye and then you can't make much of them, for there isn't much of them to make anything. These extremely small things, the chromosomes, live everywhere in our bodies, but not at random, for they are collected into certain compartments called cells which represent the bricks of which our house is made. After years of study by a multitude of students, these tiny fellows have had to give up and tell something of themselves, and one of the most interesting things is that they show one, at least, of the characteristics of all living things, be they small or large, namely, that they reproduce. At certain times, in regular ways, they split, and one becomes two. We do not know what they have to do with heredity, but they have everything, as far as we are able to find out. You remember the Chinese puzzle of box-in-box arrangement? Well, the chromosomes seem to present this puzzle in even harder form, for in the Chinese puzzle the boxes get smaller and smaller as you take them to pieces, whereas the chromosomes, every time they divide, each of the two becomes immediately as large as the one from which they came, so that it is as if the box in the puzzle would immediately grow to be as large when it is taken out of another box as the larger box was in the first place. That is where the trouble comes in in trying to find out how these little things work. Where do they get all their vitality? Well, we say in our ignorance, they are alive.

If you want some romance, just reflect upon this: These minute chromosomes which carry the blue eyes and the Saxon hair of the Northern races, the dark browns of the Southern peoples, the mentality of the Caucasians or the dulled sensibilities of the Fuegians, look and act much as if they were bacteria! In fact, someone has wondered whether or not our chromosomes are not parasites within us. We have good bacteria in our intestines aiding us by catching certain substances which would otherwise be lost and returning them to our system. Then there is the matter of the granules of the plant cell, which is romance again:

If you take a thin slice of a potato before it has reached much of a "bump" beneath the leaves of the potatoes as they are growing in the ground, you will find that it looks quite different from a store potato. The store potato is filled with starch, whereas you can find little, if any, starch in the young potato. In place of starch, if you use a microscope and make little things big, you will find tiny granules, which the botanist calls "plastids," or minute bodies. It takes the patience of a Job to find out what happens as the potato grows, but we have scientists who would out-Job Job in patience, and they have found that these little, insignificant things, the plastids, have not only the power of living and moving, but of making starch! Ask a chemist to make some starch for you and watch his expression. "Can't be done," says he, yet it is done by these myriads of dots called plastids. Draw a picture of a bacterium and then one of a plastid and you have replicas; in other words, these two things look alike and act alike.

Then let us turn to another field of science. Take the matter of disease germs. "Oh," you say, "you are talking about bugs." Yes, bugs, but awfully small bugs. I mean the kind no one ever saw, which the scientist calls "filterable viruses." Which means that they go through the finest holes of his filters. A hundred of these pores side by side would be about 1-100th of an inch long, and that is about what the clearest human eye can just see. So these "filterable" bodies, which are known to be the cause of certain diseases, are infinitely small. Moreover, they may be cultured, that is, may be made to reproduce, and while we do not know in some cases what they look like, we imagine they look like the other minute things with which we have been dealing, namely, chromosomes and plastids.

You see, then, we are in a world of invisible things which perform the essential duties we ourselves perform—use up oxygen, move, reproduce, etc. In fact, they are as much alive as we are. If anyone is looking for the thing called "life" he will find it in just such little bundles.

We have been talking about small material things, but there are small things which concern not organized bodies but substances of a chemical nature, although it must be confessed that we know little of the chemistry of these things. I mean such things as vitamines and enzymes. Everyone has heard of vitamine, the substance or substances which you find in some foods and not in others which are necessary to the human organism if it is to live and grow as it should. Whatever they are, we know this about them: They are extremely economical and a little goes a long way. To protect a person against the ravages of some of the diseases it takes less than a level teaspoonful of a solution of vitamine. We haven't yet hit upon a good way of saying how much vitamine we are talking about, but if you follow the directions on the bottle, you will need that small amount. Do you remember how Stefansson, in his book on Arctic travel, told how a few bits of marrow cured his men of scurvy; how some of his men disregarded his orders to eat fresh meat and "just for spite" they did not do so; how, after he had sent back some marrow bones and received a letter from the men saying that they were now well enough to travel, he was surprised at the speed of recovery?

Here, again, we have the infinitely small and we find it again in our enzymes, those substances of unknown composition which occur in ourselves and bring about the digestion of our food. Take an egg and boil it hard. Remove the white and put it in some water and add a few drops of muriatic acid (which occurs in our stomachs) and a small pinch of pepsin; this pepsin is the dried material obtained from the inside of a pig's stomach. Leave the egg and the pepsin (which is an enzyme) in a warm place for a day and a night and you will find that about all the white has been liquefied, or, in other words, digested. That little pinch of pepsin did the trick. You can repeat the experiment, taking the cheese you obtain from a quart of milk in place of the egg, and it will be digested in an incredibly short time. An incomparably minute amount of enzyme, an infinitely large amount of substance upon which it works! We are again in the realm of the minute.

We have been talking about living things, but if we turn to inanimate things we encounter wherever we delve this same interest in the small. Our sons and daughters may no longer define matter as "that which" or "when," but they are made to understand that matter nowadays is known to be composed of charges of electricity and that electric charges are probably regions of compression in an all-pervading "ether," or liquid filling all space.

The man from Samoa was being interrogated. "Yes, I like San Francisco, but it is so far away from everywhere!" The trouble with man is that he is so large he is away from everything where things are "doing." The machinery of the universe is in the infinitely small, not in the great. If we were the size of a bacterium, scientific discovery would be easy; we should be near the base of supplies.
